A LAW UNTO THEMSELVES?

By JAMIE McGINNES

MORE than three quarters of police officers caught speeding or jumping red lights in Kent did not get tickets, it has emerged.

New figures revealed that just 31 out of 136 police officers caught on camera for the traffic offences in the county last year were fined or had points put on their driving licence.

Nationally, 84 per cent of ordinary drivers are given £60 fines and have their licence endorsed with three points.

Motorists groups blasted Kent Police, accusing the county constabulary of double standards.

Brian Macdowall, secretary of the Kent branch of the Association of British Drivers, said: "We very much feel there has always been one rule for them and another rule for us."

In some cases he said the officers might be able to justify the traffic offences if they were on emergency calls, but the number punished still seemed too low.

He expressed concern that officers could be breaking the speed limit "with impunity".

"Generally, the enforcement of speed limits is fairly strict in the county," he said. "You are not shown any mercy unless there are exceptional circumstances."

Across the UK, details obtained using the

'If car is not on emergency call the driver will get a ticket'

Freedom of Information Act revealed, on average, only one in 200 officers caught for traffic offences was fined or given points in 2006.

Just 354 officers out of 90,480 caught on camera for jumping red lights or speeding were landed with tickets.

In a quarter of incidents, police cars had their blue lights flashing, seemingly indicating they were attending an emergency call-out. But thousands did not, so it is unclear why they were not punished.

Some officers were given written warnings or made to go to speed awareness workshops instead of having fixed penalty notices.

The Kent figures do not state whether the officers were on or off duty at the time of the offence.

Triggered

Asked why so few officers were given tickets in the county last year, Kent Police said that Kent and Medway Safety Camera Partnership tells the force when police cars have triggered cameras and ask for a reason.

A spokeswoman for Kent Police told this newspaper: "They will then issue tickets if the reason for speeding is not sufficient."

The Association of Chief Police Officers (Acpo) said it was up to forces as to whether or not to issue a ticket.

Acpo said each case of a policeman receiving a motoring ticket was treated on its own merits by individual forces.

If they were answering an emergency call or pursuing a criminal that would be taken into consideration.

Acpo's statement added: "There could be other reasons that the force would take into account when seeing if the ticket required action.

"This would explain why the number of fines actually paid does not match up with the number of tickets issued. Police action in dealing with this issue is fully in accordance with the law."

A spokeswoman for Kent and Medway Safety Camera Partnership said: "If the vehicle is not on an emergency call the individual driving is treated as an ordinary member of the public and the ticket is sent out accordingly to the appropriate emergency service."

Each year, there are about 20,000 accidents involving police vehicles around the UK.

KoS asked Kent Police how many collisions its vehicles had been involved in over the last five years.

At the time of going to press, the force was unable to provide an answer.

South East short-changed as funding moves North

THE South East receives 30 per cent less funding from the Government than the North East, a new report says.

A study by the Centre for Economics and Business Research, an independent think-tank, warned that the gap between the UK's regions is set to widen further.

It predicted public spending as a share of Britain's GDP (Gross Domestic Product) – one way of measuring the size of the economy – will fall to 33.5 per cent in the South East in 2007, down from 34.8 per cent last year.

But it said the North East's share of public spending in 2007 will be 63 per cent, while it will be 54 per cent in the North West.

Cllr Alex King, deputy leader of Kent County Council, said the report reinforced the authority's long-held claim that it is being short-changed by central government.

Bias

"This just goes to say what we've been saying for years," he said.

"There has been a bias against the South East of England and we believe against authorities such as Kent, Essex and East Sussex."

He said regional funding per head for public services was about £5,950 in the South East, compared to £7,690 in the North East and £8,265 in Scotland.

"You get more money as you go north," said Cllr King.

The Government has previously responded by accusing the Tory-led county council of exaggerating the problem.

Last October, public bodies in Kent launched a united plea for "fair" funding from ministers.

But, speaking at the time, Gwyn Prosser, Labour MP for Dover and Deal, said KCC was "over-egging" the situation.

Laura Sandys, the Tories' parliamentary hopeful in South Thanet, said: "This Government's prejudice that the South East is full of leafy suburbs is just not accurate and we have been suffering as a result."

Reformed 'yobs' award ceremony

YOUNGSTERS previously dubbed "anti-social, disrespectful" or "wasters" are being given awards for turning their lives around.

Their achievements will be celebrated on Friday at an event organised by the young people's charity Fairbridge, at the Royal Dockyard Church in The Historic Dockyard Chatham.

Fairbridge helps some of Kent's most challenging youngsters unlock their potential and improve their future prospects.

A spokesman said: "It is a wonderful chance to showcase achievement of some of the most marginalised young people from across Kent and Medway."

600 plants seized in police drug raid

CANNABIS plants with a street value of up to £100,000 were taken by police in a raid on a semi-detached house.

Police turned up at the property in Broad Walk, Kidbrooke, in Greenwich, on Tuesday morning. They found up to 600 marijuana plants at the house and a 21-year-old man was arrested.

Sergeant Alfred Peacock, of Kidbrooke with Hornfair Safer Neighbourhood Team, said: "I want to emphasise these sort of operations are linked with serious and organised crime networks. Any local people who are suspicious about premises in their neighbourhood should contact local police."

Historic theatre names new man

A NEW artistic director has been appointed for the Theatre Royal in Margate.

Will Wollen, 32, who is due to start work in July, hails from the award-winning Watermill Theatre in Berkshire.

In his first few months, he will have to organise the theatre's autumn and spring programmes, which will include the Canterbury Festival and a pantomime.

Mr Wollen said: "I am thrilled to be coming to the Theatre Royal. Buildings like this are rare and my aim is to put the theatre and its work at the very heart of the community, so that it's a place where everyone can feel welcome to engage with what we do."

Sir Roy Strong says village centrepieces should be opened up for wider use

Church should service its rural communities

By JAMIE McGINNES

KEEPING THE FAITH: (Left clockwise) St Mary's Church at Postling, St John the Baptist Church at Barham, St Mary the Virgin at St Mary-in-the-Marsh, St Peter Church at Whitfield

A CLARION call has been sounded for a "crusade" to turn rural churches over to local communities.

Sir Roy Strong, author, broadcaster, and former director of the National Portrait Gallery and the Victoria and Albert Museum, said many of the 10,000 in the UK were being underused. He said the buildings could be adapted for a range of communal activities rather than just worship.

But religious leaders in Kent have said they are already working hard to encourage local communities to make the most of the county's 600 rural churches.

Sir Roy told BBC Radio 4 the declining use of village churches has coincided with people moving out of the countryside into towns.

Whereas in the 1800s, four out of five of the population lived in the countryside, the same proportion now live in urban areas. Villages have lost many of their traditional shops, but churches still remained, he said.

"If you look at the average village, the garage has gone, the pub's gone and the doctor, the post office, the baker, practically everything's gone, but this one wonderful old building which everybody loves."

Compromising

Sir Roy said the churches should be opened up for more activities.

"What's the point of opening for one hour every other Sunday for a handful of worshippers? Every English village ought to look at its church and say 'let's have a strategy for the next 20 years – where are we going to take this building? What are we as a community of believers and non-believers going to do in order to maintain it and enjoy it and give it life?'"

Peter York, assistant secretary of the Kent Federation of Amenity Societies, said he thought Sir Roy's suggestion for turning over churches to local communities was an "excellent idea".

"Churches used to provide more of that at one time," he said. "I think that's a much better use of churches in a way, rather than making them redundant."

Ian Dodd is secretary of Canterbury's diocesan advisory committee for the care of churches. He said that communities were already being urged to use churches as much as possible.

He said: "They are basically community buildings – that's how they were at the outset in medieval England. It's somehow drifted away from that over the years.

"The diocese is committed to encouraging people to widen the community use wherever possible, not compromising their prime purpose as a place of worship."

Churches in Kent that already serve as more than merely a place of worship include St Mary the Virgin at Rolvenden and St Mary the Virgin at Shipbourne, which both double as venues for farmers' markets.

St Mary of Charity's Church in Faversham, is used by a variety of community groups.

In 2004, the Church of England said more than 77 groups, many with special needs, visited or worked within the church, including a youth club and crèche.

But Mr Dodd said that because most of Kent's churches had listed status altering their interior so they could be used for other community activities was often an obstacle.

A Church of England spokesman said: "Church buildings belong to their parishes and we echo Sir Roy Strong's call for churches to consider how they can best use their buildings to serve the wider community.

"In rural areas the opportunity to access the facilities and services that urban communities take for granted is becoming harder and we know from some of the creative ideas in Kent alone that churches can be turned into places from which some of these declining rural services can be delivered."

Cherie's style guru to discuss her life in the media spotlight

CAROLE Caplin, who gave style tips to Cherie Blair, is to tell women in Kent how to overcome adversity.

She is guest speaker at the Women in Business lunch at the Ramada Hotel in Maidstone on Tuesday.

The former model became friends with Mrs Blair after meeting her in a gym in London in the 1980s.

However, in 2002, Ms Caplin and Mrs Blair hit the headlines with the Cheriegate scandal – over the purchase of two flats in Bristol by the Prime Minister's wife.

A discount had been secured by Ms Caplin's then boyfriend, convicted fraudster Peter Foster. The ensuing row became known as 'Cherigate'.

At Tuesday's event, organised by Business Link, Caplin will begin by walking around the audience, chatting to those attending.

Carole Black, events manager at Business Link in Kent, said: "It is no secret that Carole has been in the media spotlight in the past few years and part of her presentation reveals how she has coped with, managed and conquered adversity – a theme common to us all."

KoS concert gets support from former EastEnder

By PETER BOYES
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ANITA Dobson is backing Kent on Sunday's charity concert at Canterbury Cathedral.

The former EastEnders' actress has given her support to the fund-raising event.

Sing Freetown, on July 30, features a performance by a renowned blind school choir from Sierra Leone.

Ms Dobson said: "To listen to the Milton Margai School for the Blind choir's singing is to remind oneself of the singular and simple joy that the human voice can bring. Their performances are joyous, uplifting and spellbinding."

Ms Dobson is vice president of the Royal London Society for the Blind, based at Dorton House School in Sevenoaks. She is married to Queen guitarist Brian May.

The blind school is twinned with Milton Margai in Freetown.

The concert is free, and KoS readers are invited to apply for tickets, but there will be a collection at the end. All money raised will be donated to the only registered blind school in Sierra Leone, one of the world's poorest countries.

Ms Dobson's backing comes after the Queen's representative in Kent gave his full support to our concert.

The Lord Lieutenant, Allan Willett, CMG, said he expected the performance to be "wonderfully uplifting".

He told KoS: "This year the Kent Lieutenancy's main initiative is Celebrating Youth Achievement and there can be few greater achievements than that of the choir of the Milton Margai School for the Blind in staging a major concert at Canterbury Cathedral."

Beneficial

This newspaper is organising the concert with the UK charity that supports the school.

The show will tell the story of the country's history to commemorate the abolition of the slave trade.

Tony Blair was in Sierra Leone this week as part of his last official visit to Africa as Prime Minister.

He was made an honorary paramount chief as a reward for sending 1,500 British troops to the country in 2000.

The decision helped end the brutal rebel war that claimed tens of thousands of lives and allowed democracy to return.

Mr Blair said Sierra Leone was "an important symbol for the future of our world".

He added: "Whatever the challenges that remain, the fact is there has been enormous and beneficial change to this country and we are proud to have played our part in this."

The UK gives around £40 million a year in aid to the former crown colony, which was founded with and for freed slaves.

This year, Kent on Sunday readers donated one-tonne of books and educational materials to a coastal village called Kent.

All KoS readers are invited to the July 30 concert. To obtain tickets, please write with your name, address, a stamped addressed envelope and a note stating how many tickets you would like, to Bernard Ginns, Editor, Kent on Sunday, Apple Barn, Smeeth, Hythe Road, Ashford, Kent, TN25 6SR.

People may also pick up tickets from the office. Please telephone ahead to avoid disappointment.

Ceremony to remember Falklands

The 25th anniversary of the Falklands campaign is to be commemorated jointly with the National Veterans Day at the Royal Engineers Museum in Chatham on June 16.

The principal events will be a tri-service service and themed displays on the Falklands war.

A spokesman said: "Senior service officers and veterans will lead the commemoration.

"The Mayors of Medway, Maidstone, Swale and Gravesham and a representative of the Lord Lieutenant of Kent will be the chief guests at this important occasion."

The war was fought against Argentina in 1982 over the disputed Falklands Islands and claimed the lives of 907 people.

Firemen win recognition for teen help

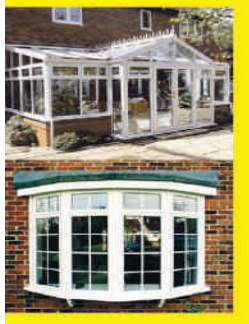

A PROJECT set up by Kent firefighters to help teenagers with additional learning needs has scooped a top government award.

Students from Meadowfield School in Sittingbourne took part in different confidence-building activities with Faversham firefighters.

They also gained an understanding of the fire service and safety issues.

The partnership won a gong at the first Fire and Rescue Service Equality and Diversity Awards.

Faversham crew manager Gary McRobb, who came up with the idea, said afterwards: "We are so pleased to win this award."

Migrant workforce is benefit to the UK than

EXCLUSIVE

By JAMIE McGINNES

BRITONS should be grateful for the contribution made to the UK's economy by Eastern European migrants, a senior EU official has suggested.

During a visit to Kent, Reijo Kemppinen said he did not think more money should be provided by Europe to pay for the infrastructure needed to support immigrants from countries such as Poland and Lithuania.

A report this week revealed a quarter of migrants from Eastern Europe plan to stay in Britain permanently.

Sceptics claim the extra pressure on public services outweighs the benefits of the thousands of incomers.

However, Mr Kemppinen, head of the London office of the European Commission, said most of the new arrivals were doing jobs that Britons did not want.

"You have hugely over-qualified carpenters and plumbers and nurses and waiters across this country – people who have come here to earn money," he said.

"By the time they have earned enough or the living standards in their own countries rise they will go back."

He added: "If these people all of a sudden left, where would you be then? Where would you get your bus drivers and your waiters and your plumbers. Those are jobs that people are filling that were not filled by the British."

Even so, Mr Kemppinen said he could understand the need for funding to pay for improving immigrants' language skills.

"When it comes to these people, many of them not having proper language skills for example or means of adapting to the local community, obviously it is our concern as much as it is yours that these kind of changes do not impose too much of a burden on social services or community relations.

"That is why we are certainly in favour of investing in projects that would help facilitate integration."

Most of the migrants interviewed in this week's report from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation said they had originally planned to return home, but changed their minds after living in Britain.

EU OFFICIAL: Reijo Kemppinen claims most foreign workers are doing jobs Brits wont

The Government had predicted that only 13,000 would come from Eastern Europe each year after Britain opened its borders in 2004.

But figures released last week revealed that 640,000 Eastern Europeans have registered to work in Britain.

Rabbit

Mr Kemppinen said he was not surprised the original forecasts had been proven wrong.

"Even the Government of today thinks the figure that was quoted before the enlargement of member states took place was quite unfortunate. It was not based on any scientific or other research – it was just pulled like a rabbit from a hat."

Poland, the Czech Republic, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Hungary, Slovenia and Slovakia became part of the EU in May 2004, with Bulgaria and Romania following in January.

Sir Andrew Green, chairman of the think-tank Migrationwatch UK, said: "The social costs of the present massive levels of immigration, including their impact on infrastructure and public services, far outweigh any benefit."

A Home Office spokesman said: "The Government supports legal migration to the UK which has been of great benefit to the economy with skilled migrants filling gaps in our labour market."

But he added: "There are legitimate concerns about managing some of the effects of migration on communities. The Government is listening to these concerns.

"That is why it has taken a more gradual approach to opening the UK's labour market to people from Bulgaria and Romania by maintaining restrictions and introducing quotas on low-skilled jobs."

Mr Kemppinen said the focus should be on illegal immigrants and tightening border controls to prevent them entering the entire continent, not just Britain.

The EC official was in Ramsgate on Wednesday to open a new £680,000 family and community centre, of which £300,000 was funded by European Union money.

It was an example of one of several projects that benefited from the EU, he said,

"People here in this country tend not to know actually too much about what the European Union does."

In February, Mr Kemppinen, who is a Finn, told Kent on Sunday that British people should snap out of their "island mentality" and learn to embrace other European countries.

Help needed to stem flow of immigrants

By PETER BOYES

A EURO-MP has called on the Government to work more closely with French authorities in Calais to tackle the rising number of immigrants arriving in the area bound for Britain.

Richard Ashworth, Tory MEP for the South East, met the Mayor of Calais, Jacky Henin, this week, and found out about his plans to open a temporary building with shower and soup kitchen facilities.

Mr Ashworth said the building would stop short of becoming a second Sangatte refugee camp and was needed for humanitarian reasons for the hundreds of immigrants sleeping rough. But he said the mayor claimed the British authorities have taken no interest in the proposals.

Mr Ashworth said: "The Mayor of Calais wants to put up a Portakabin-type thing. The point is it is a shower facility, not a sleeping facility.

"But the mayor has had no contact with the Home Office or the French Interior Ministry.

"It leaves the local authorities in Calais in an almost impossible position. The mayor has got the message it's not acceptable to put up another Sangatte, but they have charitable organisations pressuring them. He feels shot at from all sides."

The French authorities says there are 300 immigrants living rough in Calais, but aid agencies claim the figure is closer to 1,000. The immigrants are from places like Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Sudan and Nigeria.

Mr Ashworth said poverty was a key reason for people leaving their home countries.

He said border security had to be improved at key entrance points into France "to stop the immigrant flow".

"It's a pan-EU problem," he said. "The governments need to sit down and talk to each other. There has been no communication from the Home Office with the authorities in Calais."

The centre proposed by the Mayor of Calais would be 200m sq.

Damian Collins, the Tories' parliamentary candidate for Folkestone and Hythe, said the Home Office should be making a greater effort to liaise with the French authorities.

"If the Mayor of Calais is willing to talk and tell us more about what he's doing we should be engaging more with people at that level."

A spokesman for the Home Office said: "We have remained in close contact with the French authorities since Sangatte closed and are clear they are opposed to any accommodation centre that would attract illegal immigrants and the traffickers who prey on them."

He said the number of illegal immigrants arriving in the UK from Calais has fallen by nearly 90 per cent since Sangatte closed in 2002 and UK immigration controls started in the city.

'Shameful' Russian gay attack

THE BRUTAL treatment of gay protesters by police in Moscow was "shameful".

British gay rights activist Peter Tatchell and Right Said Fred singer Richard Fairbrass were punched during a march in the Russian capital last Sunday.

Reijo Kemppinen, the European Commission's top man in Britain, condemned the actions of the country's authorities, who were alleged to have allowed the attacks to have taken place – before arresting Mr Tatchell.

"I think it's genuinely shameful," he said.

"Obviously every country is entitled to have its own law and order and expect that people behave accordingly, but when it comes to people expressing their rights, their views, their opinions, their personal preferences, in a modern democratic society they should be allowed to do so without any aggression or violence.

"It is the role of the authorities to protect them."

Meanwhile, a Polish watchdog sparked controversy by trying to ban the children's television programme Teletubbies for "promoting homosexuality".

Ewa Sowinska, spokeswoman for children's rights in Poland, raised questions about the character Tinky Winky.

"I noticed he was carrying a woman's handbag," she told a magazine. "At first, I didn't realise he was a boy."

TAKE CARE OF YOUR RUBBISH

You wouldn't use an unlicensed taxi.

So why use an unlicensed waste remover?

The law now states that if you have any of your rubbish removed and it ends up being flytipped, you could be held responsible and fined. When dealing with waste removal services or tradesmen where rubbish will be generated, like builders, plumbers, gardening contractors, always ask them for a valid waste carriers licence.

Follow these 3 simple steps to help protect yourself and the environment.

HOW TO CHECK

1. Ask the waste removal service/tradesman for their waste carrier licence number.
2. Check their waste carrier licence number or their company name by visiting the Clean Kent website: www.cleankent.com and following the link to the Environment Agency or call 0870 850 6506.
3. Please keep a note of all the information you receive from the waste removal service/tradesman and a receipt for any work done. If they're not registered don't use them. Inform Clean Kent of the rogue trader immediately by calling 0845 345 0210.

Don't forget if you see someone flytipping call the Clean Kent hotline on 0845 345 0210. All calls are confidential.

Thousands to face home care cost hike

By JAMIE McGINNES
jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

THOUSANDS of pensioners and disabled people across Kent face paying more money to be looked after at home.

Kent County Council wants to increase charges by up to £45 a week within three years.

About 8,000 people receive domiciliary care across the county. At least 5,000 of them will have to pay more under the new regime.

It is thought KCC hopes to cut £628,000 from its £273 million adult services bill from September to April next year.

A support group has accused the county council of increasing care charges for disabled people because they are an "easy target".

Unfair tax

Allen Jones, chairman of the Centre for Independent Living Kent, said the hike was "outrageous" and an "unfair tax on disabled people".

Citing the millions of pounds lost on the disastrous first plans for a Turner gallery in the sea at Margate, he said: "KCC should put its in house in order first, instead of targeting disabled people."

Under the proposed system, anyone needing care will have 85 per cent of their income assessed to be used towards payment instead of 65 per cent.

Mr Jones claimed KCC was in breach of the Disability Discrimination Act 2005 and Disability Equality Duty for not involving and consulting with disabled people on the plans.

EASY TARGET: Home care charges could rise by up to £45 a week within three years

He added: "This review has also been undertaken without any consideration of the needs of disabled people and any increase in contributions would amount to a cut in service.

"We challenge KCC and adult services to find alternative ways of paying for this essential support and not choose such an easy target as disabled people. How would KCC staff and elected members feel if their salaries and expenses were cut by 33 per cent?"

Mr Jones wrote to Oliver Mills, managing director of Kent Adult Services, on May 21 to vent his anger at the changes.

He wrote: "Charging causes severe financial problems for disabled people and should be abolished. It is in fact an unfair tax on disabled people."

He said that three "enlightened" councils elsewhere in the country had stopped charging disabled people altogether.

Cllr Kevin Lynes, KCC's cabinet member for adult social services, blamed the need to raise prices on a lack of funding from central government.

"Social care nationwide is in crisis because it's underfunded," he said.

"We in Kent have taken a lead in warning Government that social care is teetering on the brink of catastrophe.

"We are lobbying for increased funding so that older and disabled people can get the support that they need.

"Unfortunately, that funding has not been forthcoming and so, reluctantly, we are consulting on increasing charges."

Cllr Lynes said some of the 3,000 elderly and disabled people in Kent who currently receive domiciliary care for free will now have to contribute to the costs.

The other 5,000 would have to pay more, but he said the amount would be capped at £15 a week, each year – meaning they face paying up to £45 more a week in three years time.

Willetts: 'Our policy on grammar schools is not in disarray'

EXCLUSIVE

By JAMIE McGINNES

jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

DAVID Willetts has stood by his claim that few children from poorer families manage to win grammar school places.

In an interview with Kent on Sunday, the beleaguered Tory shadow education secretary defended his view that the 11-plus "entrenches advantage".

His attack on grammars during a speech to business leaders a fortnight ago outraged many grassroots supporters and Tory MPs in Kent, which has the largest selective system in the UK.

Proof

Following his comments, the Tory leader of Kent County Council, Cllr Paul Carter, wrote to Mr Willetts telling him he was wrong to say less well-off children were not entering grammar schools.

Cllr Carter told him that three quarters of grammar school pupils in east Kent who went to universities last year came from families whose parents had never gone into higher education.

But Mr Willetts insisted he had the proof to back up his claims.

"I stand by the evidence in my speech," he told KoS.

In his speech, Mr Willetts used free school meals to show the wealth of pupils' families. He said research by the Sutton Trust education charity showed 98 per cent of grammar pupils did not receive free school meals.

Picture: REX FEATURES

STANDING FIRM: David Willetts

However, Cllr Carter said families who received Working Tax Credits were not entitled to free school meals.

"The Sutton Trust is a respected research institute," said Mr Willetts. "I'm quoting their research."

Mr Willetts said he was in favour of selection within classrooms, but not as a system for entering schools in the first place. He said he was against the 11-plus, yet in favour of streaming – putting children into sets according to their ability.

He said: "I think academic selection within schools is the way forward in the large parts of the country for which grammar schools have gone, because it has extra flexibility."

Kent and Medway have 39 grammar schools – more than anywhere else in Britain.

Mr Willetts said he would be happy to accept an invitation from Cllr Carter to visit grammar schools in the county.

"In Kent a decision has been made to keep grammar schools," he added. "I fully understand the decision. But we're not bringing back grammar schools across the rest of the country."

Instead, he said, academies and specialist sports and technology colleges were "the best way forward".

Confusingly, however, Mr Willetts, admitted that the Tory Party supported the idea of new grammar schools – if local people wanted them.

It came after Dominic Grieve, the Tories' shadow attorney general, said he would like his local education authority to be allowed to build new grammars.

Bizarrely, the Conservative Party responded by putting out a statement saying new grammars could be built "on a case-by-case basis, if the demographics required it".

Mr Willetts, who went to an independent boys' school, said: "We're not bringing back grammar schools where they've long since gone. But of course, if there's demographic change in an area which has got grammar schools, we understand the local authority will want to respond to that."

He added: "We've also said throughout we support the grammar school system in the parts of the country that have kept it and wish to keep it."

Education Secretary Alan Johnson, a candidate in the race to become Labour's new deputy prime minister, said: "The Tory education policy is in disarray."

The real cost of health

The vast problem with our health service has now become highlighted by the increasing number of hospital admissions, surgical procedures, escalating use of drugs and sky rocketing health care costs.

The problem lies within us, yes you and I…The problem is the majority of us as individuals do not think about our health until symptoms, pain, sickness or suffering start to occur within our bodies.

Research has demonstrated that most serious disease processes are well advanced before symptoms occur. For example, cancer, heart disease, diabetes and spinal decay (as a result of misalignment of the spine). By the time symptoms present themselves, it is often too late. For example, research also tells us that the first symptom for at least 40% of heart disease sufferers is death (yes, a heart attack, not chest pain, angina, no warning at all but in fact, sudden death).

I hope this message sounds loud and clear because the condition I am going to make you aware of affects no less than 75% of the population. Misalignment of the spine (better known as 'Vertebral Subluxation') can occur silently, without you even feeling it for years. Vertebral Subluxation can be caused by poor posture, poor sleeping habits, car accidents, slips and falls, sports injuries, right down to the birth process itself for both mother and child, as well as chemical imbalances and mental stress within the body.

Vertebral Subluxation can manifest itself in all sorts of ways – headaches, migraines, numbness, asthma, high blood pressure, pins and needles, poor concentration, sciatica, neuralgia, scoliosis, behavioural problems, bedwetting, and ear infections in children, lowered immunity, indigestion and back pain just to name a few.

The problem is two fold:

1) we tend to wait for symptoms to occur before we do anything about our health;

2) we tend to treat the symptom and not the cause.

More parents every month are now seeking preventative spinal health checks for their children, to ensure that they grow up healthy and drug-free. This is the most satisfying part of my role as a Spinal Specialist – to make sure we stop the current trend of increasing sickness in our community and prevent suffering in our children for their future. This makes sense – it saves money, saves time and most importantly saves unnecessary suffering in the future.

> "More parents every month are now seeking preventative spinal health checks for their children, to ensure that they grow up healthy and drug-free."

If you or your children have not yet had your spine checked by a Spinal Specialist, perhaps this is the time to do so.

And so, it is my turn to give back and share what I was given years ago by my doctor to my parents…During the month of June our family practice is providing complimentary and free spine and posture health checks for families. The first 50 callers will also receive a copy of my most recent book to help understand the secrets to better health, naturally.

We look forward to helping you.

LINE UP: The gang targeted luxury vehicles including Porsches, Ferraris and BMWs in often violent thefts

Car-ringer gang used trainee PC in £4.5m crime wave

By JAMIE McGINNES
jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

A FORMER police recruit was among 10 people sentenced for their part in a car-ringing syndicate that made more than £4.5 million.

The gang – four of whom were from Kent – stole 190 luxury vehicles, including Porsches, Ferraris and BMWs, in car-jackings at gun and knifepoint, and after stealing keys in burglaries.

Emma Rayfield, 32, from Sidcup, who was training to become a police officer, signed documents to obtain false identities for cars from the DVLA.

She also sold a stolen vehicle.

Her boyfriend, Anthony Holt, 41, also of Sidcup, was described by police as "central" to the plot. The Tube driver was linked to fraudulent documents for 136 cars.

Scrutinised

After taking the cars, the network then re-registered them using the numbers of written-off vehicles in Belgian salvage yards and in the USA.

They claimed to the DVLA they were importing the cars from Europe.

They were then sold from a garage in New Cross.

Corrupt DVLA official David Adams, 31, of Bexleyheath, was paid £500 a time to ensure their applications for documents were not scrutinised.

Detective Chief Inspector Stuart Dark, of the Metropolitan Police said: "This was a particularly ruthless organised criminal network.

"The upper echelon of the network directed others to engage in excessive violence through robberies or burglaries, with no regard for the trauma and anguish caused to their victims.

"Their only concern was their reckless pursuit in obtaining their high value ill-gained commodities, which in this instance were vehicles."

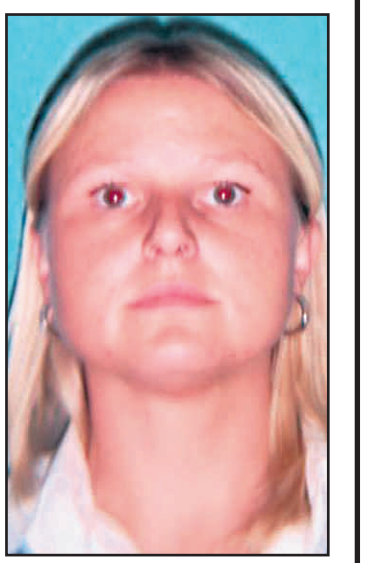

Stolen cars tracked down by the police were taken from their new owners without any compensation.

Rayfield was given a 75-hour community service order at Southwark Crown Court on Thursday. Holt was jailed for four years.

Matthew Wilson, 52, of Goddington Lane, Orpington, was sentenced to a 12-month suspended sentence earlier during the trial in May 2007.

Adams was sentenced to 200 hours community service on January 19.

The other six gang members were jailed for between nine months and five years.

New state-of-the-art day centre at QEQM hospital

GRAND DESIGNS: The new Viking unit, which opens on Monday in Margate, has the latest technology for cancer treatments

Goodwill delivers £1.6m cancer unit

AT FIRST glance you could be forgiven for mistaking this state-of-the-art building for something from the Grand Designs TV programme.

By LUCY BARTON
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

In fact, it is a new £1.6million day unit for adult cancer patients in Thanet.

The Queen Elizabeth Queen Mother hospital will be transferring chemotherapy treatment from its small, dingy room in the main building to the new Viking day unit on Monday.

It boasts top-of-the-range facilities and double the patient capacity in an open-plan treatment room equipped with easy chairs. The unit also features a video-linked seminar room that will allow doctors from hospitals across the country to come together to discuss patients.

Success

The success of the unit is largely down to Maureen Jones, chairwoman of the Cancer Care Appeal, who has led the project's fundraising.

She told Kent on Sunday: "It has taken the charity 11 years to raise £1.3 million, largely through bequests, sponsored events and corporate donations. The community participation involved in this project has been overwhelming and reflects the passion people feel towards a disease which affects so many."

The completion of the unit does not signify the end of the charity, as Ms Jones pointed out: "They will always need funds to buy new equipment or train staff, and Cancer Care Appeal intends to continue to be here and support them."

Architect Richard Agar, of Nightingale associates, based at Hove, developed the impressive, modern design. "This is the first health build I have worked on and I can honestly say it has been a breeze. Because of the cause, there has been a lot of goodwill on everyone's part."

It seems the staff and patients were given equal consideration when the plans were drawn up. An upstairs grass courtyard and impressive staffroom make for a comfortable work place.

Multiple consultation rooms have been included to allow the patients as much privacy and dignity as possible; there are now separate rooms for breast cancer patients to go for prosthetic breast fittings, as well as quiet rooms where counselling is available.

Throughout the unit there are 57 photo prints depicting the various stages of building work over an 18-month period. The photographer, Valerie Cameron, donated the work to the hospital, where the public has been encouraged to sponsor individual pictures, raising £100 for the charity apiece.

At this week's opening, George Jenkins, chairman of East Kent Hospital Trust said: "The whole community has been united in a single cause to deliver this building. I look around and think, this is what success looks like."

Was bricklayer rightful heir to English throne?

By DAVID BALDWIN

ON December 22, 1550, an old man, a retired bricklayer named Richard, was buried at Eastwell, near Ashford. He had lived there for some seven or eight years, and had helped build Sir Thomas Moyle's fine new mansion in Eastwell Park.

It is said that soon after he arrived in the village, Sir Thomas found him reading Horace in the original Latin, and was intrigued to know when and how he had been so well educated. The old man told him that he was an illegitimate son of King Richard III and had turned to bricklaying to earn his living after his father had been killed at the Battle of Bosworth in 1485.

Sir Thomas allowed him to build his own small house on the Eastwell estate and his full name, Richard Plantagenet, was entered in the parish register when he died.

Richard's story is based on a tradition handed down through several generations of the Finch-Moyle family, but there is no reason to doubt its veracity.

The entry in the parish register is genuine and the fifth Earl of Winchelsea still remembered his little dwelling when he told Dr Thomas Brett about him in 1720.

The main problem is that although Richard III acknowledged two illegitimate children, he did not have a son called Richard, and this raises the possibility the old man may not have been who he claimed to be.

But there was another Richard Plantagenet, Richard, Duke of York, the younger of the 'Princes in the Tower' who had disappeared in 1483. Could he and the man buried at Eastwell have been one and the same?

Edward V, Prince Richard's elder brother, almost certainly died from natural causes. He was receiving regular visits from his doctor and 'cures' such as forced bleeding would only have hastened his end.

But there is nothing to suggest that Richard was similarly ill and no evidence that anyone in authority killed him – Richard III was his uncle and protector, and Henry VII, who succeeded Richard, married his elder sister, Elizabeth.

But both kings would have recognised that young Richard had a better claim to the throne than either of them and would surely have taken steps to ensure that he was kept both out of sight and out of mind.

CAUGHT ON CANVAS: The Princes in the Tower, painted by John Everett Mallais and the gravestone at Eastwell (above)

It is usually supposed that no-one knew what had happened to the princes, but some people, kings, senior ministers, the boys' mother and sisters must have known. They simply chose not to say.

It is likely that Richard was lodged with trusted courtiers during Richard III's reign and taken to St John's abbey at Colchester by his uncle's friends after the Battle of Bosworth.

Henry VII agreed to allow him to remain there on condition that his persona was completely altered and he was apprenticed to the abbey's master bricklayer.

A prince would arguably have stuck out like a sore thumb on a building site, but Richard soon realised – or was made to realise – that his safety depended upon his blending into his new surroundings.

King Henry was not entirely happy with the arrangement – he visited Colchester no fewer than four times during the first six years of his reign and communicated by secret letters – but eventually, it became apparent that matters were proceeding satisfactorily.

There was a curious incident in 1491 when a young widow named Eleanor Kitchen was pardoned by the Crown for unspecified offences and committed to the custody of her family for the rest of her life. Had she formed a liaison with the now 17-year-old former prince, a liaison which could have resulted in children and had to be nipped in the bud?

Richard would probably have lived at St John's abbey for the rest of his life had it not been for the ruthless dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII.

Like other lay brothers, he would have been forced to earn his keep in the wider world when the house was surrendered in 1539, and he came to Eastwell after two or three years spent working in other places.

A son of one of the Yorkist kings would not, arguably, have survived long in the last pain-racked years of Henry VIII's reign and although Richard wanted to tell Sir Thomas Moyle his full story a deeply ingrained instinct for self-preservation asserted itself at the last moment.

He said instead that his uncle was his father and that, crucially, he was illegitimate and therefore no threat to Henry's throne.

Richard was laid to rest in St Mary's church at Eastwell, but the ruinous tomb still associated with him, which has indents for brasses of a husband and wife and several children, almost certainly belongs to Sir Walter Moyle who died in 1480.

In the final analysis it is a tale which cannot be proved or disproved, but stranger stories have been found to be true.

Recognise the achievements of the young

MORE than 60 organisations across Kent, ranging from church groups to rock bands, have so far confirmed they will be attending a major youth event.

Celebrating Youth Achievement, which is free, takes place at the County Showground, Detling, on Saturday, June 16.

The Lord Lieutenant of Kent Allan Willett CMG, the Queen's representative in the county, urged more youth groups to apply for tickets.

"It promises to be an exciting, activity-filled, fun day," he said.

The event is part of a Lieutenancy of Kent initiative aimed at highlighting all the positive work that is being done by and with young people across the county.

By JAMIE McGINNES
jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

The Lord Lieutenant said: "We also want to inform young people about the many opportunities that are open to them, encourage them to become involved – and call for more adult leaders and helpers to come forward."

Exciting

Activities and opportunities on offer include arts and circus skills workshops, sports coaching and demonstrations, caving and wall climbing tuition, marching bands, games, skills displays, careers guidance.

The event starts at 11am with a sponsored charity walk giving young people the opportunity to raise money for their groups.

Entry for the walk costs £1.50 for which walkers will receive a medal and a drink. The main event displays and activities will be available from 12 noon to 5pm.

Full information is available via the website – www.lfoy.org– and youth groups can obtain free entry tickets by e-mailing: lfoy@kentyouth.org or by calling Kent Youth on 01634 281841. The event is ticket only and is not open to the general public.

Anger grows at cricketer's deportation

By PETER BOYES
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

FORMER cricket star Dean Headley has spoken out against the Home Office's controversial decision to deport West Indies cricketer Hartley Alleyne.

The retired England and Kent fast bowler is the latest figure to support the campaign to prevent Mr Alleyne's removal from the UK.

It is understood Mr Alleyne, 50, who is married with children, has been given 28 days to leave by the Government.

He has been living and working in the country for nearly 30 years.

Mr Headley called on cricket fans to show their support for Mr Alleyne and write to their local MP to complain about the decision.

"It is a disgrace," said Mr Headley. "Why now? He has invested so much time and effort in this country, not just at a senior level but with coaching our children as well.

"He's made his home in England. I think the Government is picking on an easy target.

"He will be very upset and won't know what to do. 28 days to get out? What about all the scumbags they allow to stay in the country?"

Mr Alleyne has spoken of his frustration at dealing with the Home Office.

He said in a statement: "It is hard to be told you cannot stay in a country you have made your home.

"I cannot sleep at night thinking 'what have I done to deserve this'. It is horrible."

The right-handed batsman and right-arm fast bowler played for Barbados, Worcestershire, Kent and Natal between 1978-79 and 1989-90.

He was a contemporary of players such as Graham Gooch, David Gower and Ian Botham.

He has been working at St Edmund's, Canterbury as a cricket coach for two years.

But immigration officials turned down his request for a work permit on the grounds that he does not have an NVQ Level 3.

Mr Headley said he first met the Barbadian when he was playing for Worcestershire.

"He is a fantastic guy. Everyone who knows him loves him. I can't believe they would treat someone like him in this way."

A spokeswoman for the Home Office would not confirm if Mr Alleyne had been given 28 days to leave Britain, saying she could not comment on individual cases.

But she said: "The Government has made it clear it will take a robust approach to removing people from the country where they have no legal right to be here.

"While it is preferable that those with no right to remain in the UK return home voluntarily, it is regrettable not all choose to do so and in those circumstances it may be necessary to enforce removal."

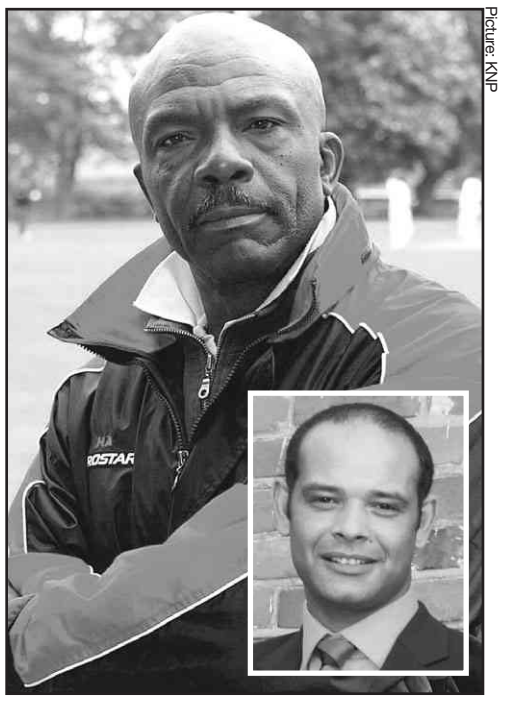

She added: "Removal is always carried out in the most sensitive way possible, treating those being removed with courtesy and dignity."

Last week, Julian Brazier, Tory MP for Canterbury and Whitstable, said he was "deeply saddened" by the decision to deport Mr Alleyne.

Mr Headley, who is group advertising director at KOS Media, said bitterly: "Obviously the Government doesn't see cricket as a skill.

"Perhaps that's why we struggle to be a leading sport nation. The world has gone mad."

What do you think of the Home Office decision to remove Mr Alleyne? Email dean.headley@kosmedia.co.uk or write to Dean at Kent on Sunday, Apple Barn, Hythe Road, Smeeth, Ashford, Kent, TN25 6SR.

TV star in latest drive for recycling

BEAUTY Denise Van Outen is adding a touch of glamour to Kent's summer recycling drive.

She is urging residents to do their bit as part of Recycle Now Week, which began yesterday and ends on Friday.

Kent County Council is organising recycling and composting promotion days and special events with district councils.

Ms Van Outen, a judge on the popular Saturday night talent show Any Dream Will Do, said: "I've been into recycling for several years and it's great to see that it's no longer something just a few of us do.

"When I'm home I always use my council's doorstep collection service and try to shop sensibly by buying goods that use less packaging. It's really easy to get into the habit and it makes a lot of environmental sense."

But the Labour group on KCC has dismissed the council's promotion of recycling and home composting as a "publicity stunt".

Cllr Ray Parker, Labour's shadow cabinet member for environment and waste, highlighted the fact that KCC got rid of its plastics recycling scheme earlier this year.

He said: "Kent's residents want a worthwhile recycling scheme. I can't believe they can scrap a scheme that actually achieves something, while then spending money on a meaningless exercise in spin."

KCC said residents in the county are recycling more than ever – 32 per cent of the total household waste generated last year.

Epic quest celebrated

Four centuries ago, intrepid explorers set sail from Kent to found the first English-speaking settlement in America. Recently a delegation from the county travelled to Virginia to take part in the fourth centenary celebrations. Among them was SIR ROBERT WORCESTER, co-chairman of the Jamestown 400th Anniversary British Committee and a deputy lieutenant of Kent. Here, he writes about the occasion…

MY story of our visit to Jamestown, to commemorate the founding of the first permanent English-speaking settlement in the New World in 1607, begins here in Kent – 1,500 years ago.

The most important things the settlers took with them four centuries ago were the English language, customs and law. The English they wrote and spoke we recognise today, and while their first leaders were appointed by the Virginia Company in London, by the following year they were electing their own leader, Captain John Smith, and the members of their council, and 12 years later chose the first elected legislative assembly in the New World, the House of Burgesses.

When those 104 adventurers first arrived on May 14, 1607, an estimated three and a half million people spoke the English language; now more than one billion people speak it, and as the Chinese Government has mandated English as the second language of China, within another ten years the number able to speak English will have exceeded two billion.

An early and important record of the English language can be found in the Textus Roffensis. This precious 13th century manuscript, written in Old English, rests in the Medway Archives in Strood, where it is kept in safekeeping for the Dean and Chapter of Rochester Cathedral.

If that's not enough, the Textus contains one of the most important of all surviving collections of Anglo-Saxon laws of King Aethelberht of Kent, c. 604 AD.

The law codes record an important stage in nation-building and one that influenced the Magna Carta of 1215, which established the written and unwritten constitutions of England, the American Declaration of Independence in 1775, the Virginia Declaration of Rights of 1776, and the Constitution of the United States of America in 1789 and later many Commonwealth countries.

This is the heritage given to America from Jamestown. The adventurers also took with them the Church of England, and truly, venture capitalism.

Not bad for the 104 settlers who survived the four-month voyage to the New World. They were on three ships: Susan Constant, God Speed, and Discovery; we were there to witness the re-enactment of the landing 400 years later, there in Jamestown at the site of the original settlement.

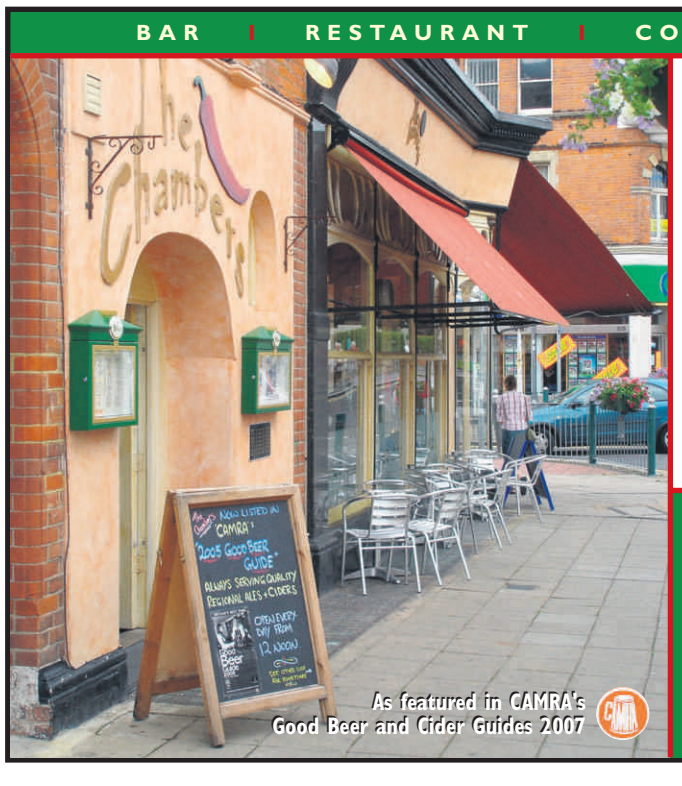

Many of the original 1607 adventurers could not have been more ill suited for the task. Because the experienced, though still young Captain John Smith, the veteran of foreign wars and capture and then escape in Turkey by the age of 25, identified about half of the group as "gentlemen", and many of these gentry knew nothing of or thought it beneath their station to tame a wilderness.

Smith's account described his fellow colonists as "ten times more fit to spoil a commonwealth than… to begin one".

Yet with perseverance, the assistance early on from the friendly Virginia Indian tribes, the introduction of livestock, the export back to England of tobacco and a great deal of luck, the Virginia settlement survived, if with a horrendous loss of lives, much deprivation, starvation and massacre by hostile Indians.

We were in Virginia for the visit by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, and for the Jamestown 400 Festival, a three-day extravaganza. There, we attended meetings addressed by the Queen and, later, by the President of the United States, George W Bush. We were even invited to be the VIP guests at the Chickahominy Indian Pow-Wow.

We were presented to the Queen on Jamestown Island where some of our small party were included in the few score of people invited to join with the monarch in the small 17th century church.

There, she presented the Governor of Virginia, Tim Kaine, with a period contemporary chair, and we then attended the reception and lunch the Virginians gave for Her Majesty and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh.

She was radiant, both in Jamestown and the day before in the capital of Virginia, Richmond, where she addressed the Virginia Assembly, followed by a reception and luncheon for some 250 Virginians including their senators, federal commissioners, and us.

Her publicity swamped that of her escort on those three days, the Vice President, and the following week, that of the President.

We attended the Jamestown events, and met with and represented Kent to senior members of the Virginia Assembly, the Virginia State Tourist Board, and prospective inward investors to Kent.

Our people met with all the local tourist boards represented at the festival, and there were few people there who were unaware of the presence of the British Committee and especially the Kent delegation.

Where does it go from here? Between June 27 and July 8, Kent will join with our new friends from Virginia to be represented at America's largest cultural event, The Smithsonian Folklife Festival.

The festival takes place on the National Mall in Washington DC, between the National Monument and US Capitol buildings.

The huge grass area is taken over each year by the internationally-renowned Smithsonian Institution to create their 'museum without walls' and enables more than one million visitors each year to learn about and understand different cultures.

It will be the first time England has ever been represented at the event. It will also be the first time that the Smithsonian Institution has partnered a US state with anywhere else.

A combined team will display both Kent and Virginian agriculture, including both states' fine wines, their maritime traditions, the building arts and crafts, including the Stevenson brothers' rocking horses, local history and tourism and our two partnerships' foods and gardens.

'Homes lack vital facilities'

NEW homes in Kent growth areas need more infrastructure and greater thought must be given to water supplies and climate change, according to a government watchdog.

Homes being built in Ashford were criticised by the Sustainable Development Commission (SDC) for not having "vital facilities".

It said some developments "aren't always coming up to scratch".

Spokeswoman Rebecca Willis said: "The priority must be to turn our existing communities into eco-towns.

"Communities can be green and prosperous, with well-planned public transport and great facilities."

The SDC said funding should be better co-ordinated, more planning should be put into providing green spaces and new housing should be linked to existing communities.

Police arrest man over stabbing

A MAN was stabbed following an early-hours argument with another man he is thought to know.

Police questioned a 20-year-old man from Sheerness on Friday, who was arrested after the stabbing in the town's Victoria Street, at about 3am.

A 30-year-old man, also from the town, was taken to Medway Maritime Hospital at Gillingham where he was treated for a stab wound to the chest. His condition was stable.

Chief Inspector Mark Chambers, the town's police commander, said it is thought the two men knew eaach other.

He said: "Police will deal with anyone who is found to be carrying a weapon – there is no excuse."

Top architects deliver an award-winning Broadside

By LUCY BARTON

THE bold yet elegant Broadside building has scooped a prize in a major awards ceremony.

The headquarters of the MHS Homes Group, designed by Tunbridge Wells-based architects Hazle McCormack Young, was announced the winner in the sustainability category at the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors South East Awards.

Judges praised its incorporation of low energy building and services while keeping with the historic riverside setting at Chatham Maritime.

RICS South East regional director Trevor Hines said: "A critical element of Broadside's success was the design's ability to provide efficient working spaces which allow privacy and security, without compromising the open-plan space on the riverside."

Broadside will go on to be judged in the national finals in London later this year.

Previous winners of the prestigious RICS award, given to projects which impact on the built and natural environment, include London's Royal Opera House and the Eden Project.

Other finalists within the county include the new visitor centre at Bedgebury Pinetum and The Grange in Ramsgate.

Bedgebury came second in the sustainability category, receiving praise for its incorporation of both educational and visitor facilities.

The Grange – once home of renowned architect Augustus Pugin – was runner-up in the conservation category, for "its influence over functionality and design of houses since it was built in the 1840s".

Railway line may reopen for use

A RAILWAY line that closed 23 years ago could reopen by next year.

Network Rail has signalled its support for the reopening of the Tunbridge Wells to Eridge Line by issuing the Spa Valley Railway with a letter of intent.

Spa Valley Railway has launched a £500,000 Return to Eridge appeal to allow the extension to go ahead.

Project manager Mike Sumpter said: "The receipt of this letter is great news. It confirms their support for the project subject to outstanding issues being resolved, including a lease for the track between Birchden Junction and Eridge."

Bringing the line back would allow travel between the towns and villages along the Uckfield mainline and Tunbridge Wells.

There are plans for joint tickets between the Spa Valley Railway and Southern, so passengers could travel from London to Eridge and then up to Tunbridge Wells West.

To help Spa Valley Railway telephone 01892 537715.

Death on a May afternoon

CHARISMATIC: 'Sir William' was also insane

TODAY Bossenden Wood, near Hernhill, is a peaceful and quiet corner of Kent. But in 1838 it was the scene of a violent armed uprising, ending in a bloodbath.

The seeds of trouble were sown in the aftermath of the Napoleonic war. Unemployment rose and the cost to parishes of poor relief soared. To control these costs, the Poor Law Amendment Act (1834) was passed. The poor were to be cared for in workhouses, where wives were separated from husbands and parents from their children.

George Nicholls, one of the first poor law commissioners, said: "I wish to see the poor house looked on with dread by our labouring classes, and the reproach for being an inmate of it passed down from father to son. Let the poor see that their parish, although it will not allow them to perish through absolute want, is yet the harshest taskmaster, the closest paymaster, and the most harsh and unkind friend they can apply to."

Enter onto the scene a charismatic Cornishman, John Nichols Thom, who styled himself as Sir William Courtenay of Powderham Castle, Devon, Knight of Malta and King of Jerusalem. He wore a costume of crimson velvet and gold, with a mantle and cap to match.

He had been imprisoned for perjury in 1833 and sentenced to three months imprisonment and transportation for seven years, but he was found to be insane and was committed to the county asylum at Barming Heath as a criminal lunatic. However, he was released in October 1837 on promise that he would be well looked after. He stayed with a friend in Boughton for a few months but by 1838 his manner changed, and he got himself a pair of pistols. He left the friend's house and stayed with a labourer, when he declared himself to be the Messiah, and stated that the Millennium was at hand.

By his oration, he inspired many of the local populace to follow him, promising social revolution and the end of poverty. Females declared that the air was filled with celestial music in his presence; others believed that he could make the stars fall down, and miraculous cures were reported.

They marched under a blue flag bearing a red lion, Courtenay at the head, armed with pistols and a sword, visiting towns from Herne Bay to Sittingbourne, encouraging others to join. By Tuesday, May 29 he was in a rare state of excitement, declaring that it was the day of judgement, the first day of the Millennium, and that he would put the crown on himself that day. His followers were, no doubt, in a state of ecstasy.

Warrant

A farmer in the village of Dunkirk complained to the magistrates that his labourers were being decoyed from his service, and a warrant was issued for Courtenay's arrest. Early the next day the constable, John Mears, with his brother Nicholas, went to Culver's farm, at Bossenden, where Courtenay and his followers were lodged, to serve the warrant. Nicholas, the brother, volunteered to do the deed.

Courtenay confronted him and shot him with a pistol, wounding him, then stabbed him and, finally, killed him with another pistol shot.

After breakfast, Courtenay and his followers made their way to Bossenden Wood, near the old A2 road, now a quiet backwater, where he administered the sacrament and declared himself to be The Christ.

By this time, warrants for arrest for murder had been issued against Courtenay and the others. Soon four justices of the peace were on the scene, but they decided to wait for the military, who had been summoned from Canterbury. When ready, they advanced on Bossenden Wood, where Courtenay was waiting. Lieutenant Boswell Bennett advanced on Courtenay, attempting to strike with his sword, but Courtenay fired his pistol, killing him on the spot. He also killed a special constable, George Catt. The soldiers opened fire, killing Courtenay and several of his followers and staining the fading bluebells with blood.

The remaining followers of Courtenay rushed at the soldiers with their crude weapons, but it was soon all over. Courtenay and six followers were dead, and another two died later. Seven others were wounded.

The dead bodies of the conspirators were taken to the Red Lion inn at Boughton, where they were put on display. It was important for Courtenay to be seen in death, because he had declared himself to be immortal. After autopsy and inquest, the bodies were buried in unmarked graves at Hernhill church. Lieutenant Bennett's remains were buried in the cloister of Canterbury Cathedral.

The Times of August 11, 1838 reported the trials for murder of nine of Courtenay's followers at the Maidstone Assizes. There were many excellent character references, and death sentences were commuted to transportation or imprisonment. It stated "the prisoners, all of whom were bathed in tears, were then removed from the dock".

Perhaps the most poignant thing was the evening service at Hernhill church on the Sunday after the battle. There could be no music, because the church musicians were either dead or in prison. Five widows, eight wives and 49 children were left to the mercy of the hated poor laws.

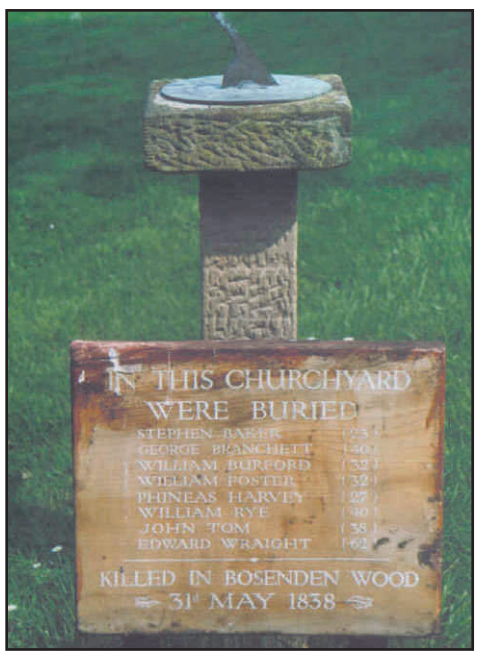

The young Queen Victoria was horrified that any of her subjects should have been beguiled to follow Courtenay. It was decided that the church had been at fault for not instructing them properly, so a new church was built at Dunkirk to enable parishioners to attend for their edification.

What is left today? Bossenden Wood is delightfully quiet, and easily accessible from the old A2 road. The Red Lion pub at Dunkirk, a low, timbered ceiling, building, where the conspirators were exhibited after death, offers good hospitality, and there is a collection of pictures and other items, relating to the battle, on display in the dining room. The new Dunkirk church is redundant, and is undergoing conversion by Polish builders.

Various artefacts collected from the site of the battle are on display in the tearoom of Mount Ephraim, a minor stately home and garden near Faversham.

In the graveyard of Hernhill church, by a sundial, is a memorial bearing the names of those conspirators who were killed in the battle and buried at the church. However, the site of their graves isn't known.

There is a marble memorial to Lieutenant Boswell Bennett in the north nave aisle of Canterbury Cathedral.

Gardener discovers roots of Darwin's theories

By RICK SENLEY

ONE hundred and fifty years ago Charles Darwin pottered around his country garden working out his theory of evolution that would revolutionise and shock the world and the way mankind saw religion.

Today, Toby Beasley wanders around that same garden, trying to piece together how it looked in Victorian times.

Mr Beasley, 37, is head gardener at Down House, the former home of the world-famous scientist and now a museum to the great thinker.

Since coming to the garden in 2002, Mr Beasley has painstakingly tried to recreate the way it looked – and the plants it held – when Darwin and his family lived here in the 19th century.

And now the English Heritage property outside Orpington is being nominated as a World Heritage Site.

Mr Beasly explained how he has tried to tailor his work in keeping with the scientist.

"Darwin was a laid-back, cosy sort of character and that's the sort of impression I want to give the garden," he said.

"It's a little bit rough around the edges, it's not been smartened up to within an inch of its life and that's part and parcel of the character of the place."

Charles Robert Darwin was born in 1809 in Shrewsbury and initially planned to study medicine, but later changed to divinity at Cambridge.

In 1831, he joined a five-year scientific expedition on the survey ship HMS Beagle at a time when most European thinkers believed the world was created by God as described in the Bible.

It was during this voyage to the Galapagos Islands that led him to radically alter his beliefs.

Darwin noticed that each island supported its own form of finch which were closely related, but differed in important ways.

On his return to England in 1836, Darwin tried to solve the riddles of these observations and proposed a theory of evolution occurring by the process of natural selection.

The animals or plants best suited to their environment, he maintained, were more likely to survive and reproduce, passing on the characteristics which helped them survive to their offspring. Gradually, the species changes over time.

Beautiful

Whilst working on these theories, in 1842, Darwin moved from London which was plagued by labour riots to Down House – originally built as a farmhouse around 1650.

The family loved the place; his wife Emma making the most of the beautiful grounds.

And it was here, with the help of breeding plants and vegetables, that Darwin wrote his On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection – a ground-breaking work that was vehemently attacked, particularly by the Church.

As with his findings in South America Darwin kept accurate records of his experiments in the garden.

Mr Beasley went on to explain how he painstakingly scoured Darwin's books to recreate the garden as close as possible to its Victorian state.

He said: "We've got nearly all the plants now that he mentioned in his archives. It's not really changed a great deal – the paths, the kitchen garden and the layout have stayed the same.

"We've tried to grow all the plants that he wrote about. We've also used photographs of the garden from the 1850s and water-colours from later periods.

"Darwin used to keep a garden encyclopaedia and in it was everything you need to know about his garden.

"Charles and Emma were quite naughty with books and used to underline and asterisk the bits they were interested in so you can almost work out what they were thinking by looking at the books.

"In fact, Emma was the ideal garden centre customer – if there was a hole, she would plant a flower in it regardless of what it looked like."

But although Mr Beasley's work is almost a replica of the historical garden, some of the plants have been victims of Darwin's survival of the fittest theory.

"We haven't been able to find some of the Victorian apple trees," he said. "They seem to have completely gone. And while we grow a lot of different peas – 28 varieties – Darwin had 41 different types, but some of those have disappeared and other seeds have had their names changed.

"It's difficult to trace the different synonyms back to the names Darwin knew them as. It takes a lot of detective work."

After publishing his theory, Darwin died at the house in April 19, 1882, aged 73, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

A girls' boarding school was established there in 1907 until it was bought in 1927 by the surgeon Sir George Buckston Browne who presented it to the British Association for the Advancement of Science together with an endowment to ensure its preservation in perpetuity as a memorial to Darwin.

Down House was formally opened as a museum on the June 7, 1929.

English Heritage took over the property in 1996 and the decision will be made as to its World Heritage Status at the end of June.

The house remains much as it was when Darwin lived there and some of his outdoor experiments on natural selection are recreated in the garden and the greenhouse.

COMMENT

We are equal

THERE is a bond of trust between the police and the public.

Although they are there to uphold law and order, the police are ultimately equal in standing to all other citizens. So it is disturbing to see so many of them apparently getting away with motoring offences.

The vast majority of ordinary drivers caught on camera speeding or running red lights are given fines and penalty points on their licence.

Not the police, however. Three quarters of them don't get a ticket in Kent and nationally, officers who were caught only had their blue lights flashing in a quarter of cases – which begs the obvious question of how so many escaped punishment.

Surely only emergency call-outs justify escaping with nothing more than a slapped wrist?

The situation brings to mind the hypocrisy of the diktat in George Orwell's Animal Farm: "All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others."

Selection woes

LAST week, David Cameron's Conservatives solemnly pledged never to build any more grammar schools.

Such an undertaking would be an "electoral albatross", said the Old Etonian.

This week, he tells us the party would look at more grammars being built – if there was a demographic need.

Confused? So are we.

The Tory party needs strong leadership and sound policies designed to meet the diverse needs of 21st century Britain.

The flip-flopping of the last week has damaged Cameron's ambition to be seen as a man of substance.

OPINION: Children aren't homogenous

NIGEL FARAGE believes in a grammar school system

THE purpose of education is to draw out the best in every child. Yet, the system we have today is a triumph of paperwork and meaningless targets over common sense. Today in Britain we have a situation where one in four 11 year-olds cannot read and to achieve the pass grade for GCSE maths needs only one in five questions answered correctly. The system is failing the very people it is supposed to help: children.

In Kent in 2004, the selective sector saw 59.7 per cent of 15 year olds achieving 5 A*-C grades, including in English and Maths as opposed to 48.4 per cent in the comprehensive system. Research shows that wholly selective schools produce the best results for all pupils, regardless of gender, race and social background. The national average across England and Wales is 54.2 per cent, which includes all schools.

'Children learn better in groups of similar ability, interest and learning styles'

We are lucky that in Kent we have considerable numbers of grammar schools, and all of the 39 grammar schools in Kent are in the top 500 state schools in the country, with 26 in the top 200.

Why is this? It's because all children in wholly selective areas do better than in areas with no selection. If children are to achieve the paramount of their possibilities then we must stop thinking that they are homogeneous. We must reject the idea that throwing all abilities together, eliminating choice and seeking the lowest common denominator achieves the best results for children.

The UK Independence Party believes that children learn better in groups of similar ability, interest and learning styles. We believe that grammar schools have a vital role to play in the education of academically more able children, and not only are we committed to the survival of existing grammar schools, but we would encourage the creation of new grammar schools and other selective schools, aiming to restore a network of grammar schools across the country. We believe that this would especially benefit children from poorer backgrounds.

But what of the cries of 'unfair' by people who think that a selective system is wrong? Well, we already have a system of selection: richer parents can afford to either pay for their children to go to private schools or the higher house prices to ensure that they are in the catchment area of the best state schools.

TORY STORY: Last week's KoS revealed the party's discontent

We believe that a proper functioning selective school system is counter-elitist: selection is based on the merit of the child. Grammar schools have demonstrated a consistent and enduring quality of education that should be emulated, not destroyed.

We are not alone in this thinking. A survey earlier in the year showed that 73 per cent of people thought that streaming in schools would help not just bright children but also those who were academically weaker.

This is why the support for grammar schools is so prevalent amongst the electorate, if not the political elite; because grammar schools and secondary moderns are the first and vital step in an education system which should allow children to be taught according to their abilities and strengths.

UKIP will fight every seat in Kent at the next General Election so voters in the county can vote for a party which stands for real education rather than an ersatz system where bright children are not challenged, and the less able are not given the teaching they need.

Grammar schools are quintessentially good because children learn better when surrounded by other children of similar ability. They are not the end, they are the means to an end. And that end is a system of education which allows all children to flourish and reach their potential.

I am very pleased to have a son who currently attends a Kent grammar school.

Glorious present

Your story 'Artist draws inspiration from Creative Quarter' last week set out an impressive picture of the Folkestone of the future.

Pity, though, that it used such emotive phrases as 'little Beirut' and 'down at heel' to indicate certain perceptions of areas of its immediate past, descriptions likely to persuade readers who are not familiar with the town that until its makeover is complete the place really isn't worth visiting. This is far from true. Many features of the Folkestone which made it a favourite holiday playground for generations of visitors are still playing their part in giving the town an appeal which is the envy of many other resorts.

The ambitious project to regenerate the 'old town' and harbour area which encompasses the Creative Quarter described in the article is among a number of commercial and public sector developments which are transforming Folkestone, the hub of a seaside-rural district with outstanding scenic, historic, heritage and cultural assets and geographical advantages, into a premier leisure and pleasure destination, a worthy successor to the resort which was once one of the smartest and liveliest in the country.

Readers who log on to www.discoverfolkestone.co.uk or call 01303 258594 for a guidebook will find plenty to encourage them to visit this south east corner of Kent.

Every one of us needs a holiday

I am writing to applaud the decision of the leader of Kent County Council to take time out for the Beijing to Paris motor rally.

I am often a critic of KCC, but it is wonderful to see we have in Paul Carter a leader who is able to enjoy his life outside politics and delegate his responsibilities for six weeks.

The assumption that KCC cannot operate without him is a nonsense, the whole point of cabinet government is that other members each take responsibility for aspects of council operation.

This is their opportunity to show they are up to the job. I am sure Paul will return refreshed and keener than ever to take on the many challenges he faces.

My donation to the Kent Children's Trust and Macmillan Nurses is on its way via the chairman's office. For the puritans among you I say – get a life yourself, but support this good cause first.

Keep diversity

The excellent article by Cllr Paul Carter, the leader of Kent County Council, (KoS, May 27) comprehensively describes how fortunate we are in Kent to have access to a modern, diverse structure of education catering for all children, whatever their ability.

Meanwhile, Martin Frey (Letters, May 27) continues his obsessive campaign, on behalf of STEP, to undermine this successful mix of education by seeking to destroy the 11-plus examination; thereby preventing academically gifted children from whatever background from attending a grammar school.

No doubt KCC councillors will resist pressure from government, and the 'one-size-fits-all' brigade, whose eventual aim is to close all grammar schools, under the false claim of providing equality for all.

Too many lorries

Action must be taken to regulate all freight lorries who use our roads. Operation Stack is receiving much opposition at present and drastic steps must be taken before these vehicles bring our transport system to a standstill and cause more accidents.

It worries me that these lorries, especially those from abroad, are allowed to be driven long distances with only one driver, leading to inability to concentrate for any length of time.

It is impossible for drivers, especially those from abroad with left hand drives, to get all-round vision. Rules must be changed to ensure that all-round vision mirrors are made compulsory now and not just on new vehicles.

As a country dweller and a cyclist, our lanes are being blighted by lorries using these completely unsuitable routes – usually with the excuse that sat-navs have guided them. I was horrified to learn that to save money a number of heavy goods vehicles are equipped with car sat-navs.

As a matter of interest, a survey could be made to see just what goods are being unnecessarily exported ie meat, vegetables, fruit, being carried both ways. Our farmers are struggling.

Time for questions

Does one have to be a crackpot to be a politician?

When you listen to the news about what our political masters get up to I'm beginning to think I'm the only one who is normal.

Look at the NHS, law, immigration and schools, the list is endless, now my local council has been told to build more houses on green belt land by such a date and then in the next breath we have got to reduce landfill or face a fine. In our area, where once was a single dwelling there are now a dozen flats. Can't these thickos realise humans create waste?

You only have to listen to Question Time to answer my first question.

Mr R Staples
Hythe

Voters wake up

I see that some of your readers consider Mr Blair to be the best PM of all time.

I don't go much on their judgment. Winston Churchill saved this country, now Mr Blair and his stand-in Mr Brown are trying to kill off the UK for good with help of course from the EU. Are British voters going to wake up?

A Wanstall
Dover

Crackpot Cameron

Mr Cameron's ideas on education are indeed disastrous – they would take us from the frying pan into the fire. Yes, the Kent test is an out-dated, elitist model of education that benefits no one and leaves Kent with some of the worst performing schools in the country, but suggesting that we need more privately-sponsored (read privately-run) city academies is a real recipe for disaster.

Education does need to be tailored to the needs of individual pupils, a 'one-size-fits-all' approach does not work and simply dividing pupils into two groups to go to grammar or high school just moves us to a 'one-of-two-sizes-fits-all' approach.

However, privately-run academies are the worst of all options. Learning should not be dictated by consumerism and business or be focused on economic dominance, but should look towards co-operation and the nurturing of each individual. Privately-sponsored schools will not provide the right focus for our future leaders if we are to have a sustainable society in the future. These academies are also much less accountable than state-run schools – people have enough trouble getting their voice heard without things being made harder.

Dungeness is no good

We are appalled that Dungeness should be considered to be a priority location for a new nuclear power station.

There are very good reasons why the site is unsuitable. Existing and planned windfarms combined with better energy conservation will easily address the Government's mythical 'energy gap.'

First, there is a problem with the supply of water for cooling the plant. The South East has suffered water shortages now for several years running. A number of nuclear power plants in France had to be closed down last summer because the drought meant that water supplies were insufficient for the purpose. Second, its low-lying location puts it at risk of flooding: a risk which can only increase as we face rising sea levels due to current and future polar ice melt. Any new nuclear power station would require massive, expensive sea defences, adding to costs.

Third, there are already problems with the rail route taken by the nuclear waste flasks which travel through Ashford and London to the North West of England for storage and/or reprocessing. Since low level radioactive storage facility at Drigg in Cumbria is almost full, which community is to have such waste inflicted upon them?

Add to the unsuitability of the site, the fact that the Government's own Sustainable Development Commission has concluded that nuclear power does not make economic sense, then the case for any new nuclear power stations anywhere in the country becomes untenable.

Right to whinge

In the month of May 1999, John Prescott, called us "pampered Kentish Whingers".

His comment led to the formation of the Kentish Whingers Correspondence society.

His comment was supremely ironic as its MPs have just voted to take £10,000 each from our taxes to spend – publicising themselves. It's a waste. They should hold meetings on street corners and in village halls to tell us what they do.

Once elected they don't like to meet voters.

Snap of history

I am researching into the history of a company called Wray Optical, also known as Wray Cameras, which once operated in Bromley, and would like to speak to any former employees of the company who worked there between 1945 and 1960.

In particular, I'm interested in anyone who worked on the Wrayflex series of cameras built there at that time. I'm looking also for information about two German brothers who were seconded to Wray sometime around 1945-47. Their names, I think, were Harry and Werner Goebbels.

These brothers, I am informed, built a prototype of a camera that never actually went into production, details of which have now disappeared into the mists of time. If anyone out there knows anything about it I would be delighted to hear from them.

I can be reached by telephone on 01438 840728, or via email at wade@word-power.demon.co.uk.

A big £150 voucher to spend at Jacques Vert

JACQUES Vert's divine cappuccino and clotted cream colours will ensure you'll turn heads at any occasion this spring and summer.

The 'Pretty Woman' inspired collection is definitely for the lady who knows her style. Exclusively designed and perfectly cut for a flattering shape, it features exquisite embroidery and delicate beaded details.

For a more formal look, a striking aqua and deauville colour palette is impressive. Satin trim edges and contrasting piping on jackets adds those noticeable special features. Choose hand-painted silk chiffon with carefully hand-stitched beads or distinctive scatter spot and abstract floral prints this season.

Raspberry adds flavour to our 'Aria' collection with a fluted skirt and geisha floral top. Pearl effect beads can be found in its organza trim. Exquisite truffle embroidery finishes a clotted cream top and eight-panel crystal georgette skirt beautifully.

Outfits can be completed perfectly with a fully co-ordinated array of wonderful shoes and accessories, adding that extra touch of elegance to you and your fabulous day.

We have teamed up with KOS Media to offer two lucky readers £150 worth of vouchers each to spend at Jacques Vert.

KSK courses offer management skills

SMALL businesses are being given the chance to gain a competitive edge with training courses to improve management skills, writes Jamie McGinnes.

The programmes, which are funded by the Learning and Skills Council, allow managers to gain an NVQ Level 3 or NVQ Level 4 in several areas, including business and administration, customer service and business start-up skills.

Newly-launched Knowledge and Skills Kent (KSK) is providing the courses from an NVQ training centre at the White Cliffs Business Centre in Dover.

The centre was formally opened by LSC partnership manager Debbie Lloyd, who said the NVQ programmes would help managers gain the practical skills they need to turn good business ideas into successful enterprises.

"Recent research has shown that nearly a quarter of small businesses in Kent and Medway say the poor skills levels of staff are now a significant problem and hold back business development, with 14 per cent of small businesses highlighting the specific need for improved management skills," she said.

"Small businesses can gain tremendous benefits through management training at NVQ level 3 and at NVQ level 4, teaming studies with practical experience and assessment in the workplace.

"The KSK courses will help small businesses improve management skills and open the way to increased competitiveness and profitability."

More than 30 managers have now been enrolled on the scheme's courses and KSK hope to expand and develop the programmes. KSK is the training arm of Technology Enterprise Kent (TEK) and its programmes are paid for through national LSC funding and the European Social Fund (ESF).

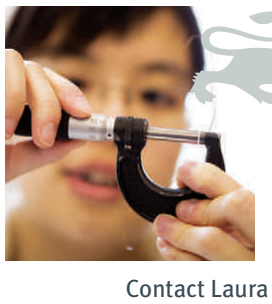

Patrick Tierney, TEK European and community initiatives manager, said the new training centre was attracting managers from across Kent and Medway in a broad range of business sectors.

He said because the centre had been accredited by the organisation Education Development International, it can provide access to a full range of NVQs in business management.

KSK wants to expand its training and business advice programme and plans to include an international fact-finding mission for business students.

Audi rings changes at the top

AUDI can no longer be dismissed as the 'junior member' of the German executive club.

Having launched the all-new and impressive TT Coupe and Roadster recently, the big Q7 SUV (sports utility vehicle) and now a complete new luxury coupe, the A5, its four-ring badge can claim equal footing with Mercedes' star and BMW's propeller emblem.

Forward orders mean that dealers know where the A5s are going when they arrive here in July, such is the interest in the newcomer.

Prices start from £30,175 for the 2.7 TDI, to £39,725 for the S5 quattro flagship and the car's dramatic looks perhaps conceal its four-seat practicality plus the 455-litre boot – the Audi A4 saloon tops that by just five.

If that were not enough, Audi has also unveiled a wickedly styled design concept based on the newly arrived Mk 2 TT Roadster – the TT Clubsport quattro.

If the original Mk 1 TT roadster echoed the lines of Porsche's classic 356 Speedster of the 1950s, then the Clubsport evokes it even more with its low wraparound screen.

Audi – clearly hoping for a keen reception that might be a green light for production – has also done away with a hood and put racing-style nacelles and lower roll-over hoops behind the two seats.

But there are other distinctive features: the Audi four rings is on the bonnet rather than the grille; large front air inlets supply additional air to the tweaked 2.0-litre (300bhp) TFSI engine; and big wide 20-inch alloys highlight the low slung power of this all-wheel drive sportster.

In 'standard' 260bhp form, the same powerplant has just won 'Engine of the Year' – a third successive victory for Audi.

The annual award, presented after deliberations by 30 international motoring writers, described the Audi engine as "not only incredibly versatile and clever, but also remarkably powerful".

Proton specs up Gen-2

AT the other end of the motoring scale, Malaysia's Proton has added value to its cut-price Ford Focus challenger, but retained the £8,995 entry price.

The five-door car features the choice of a new dark cloth or leather interior at no extra cost plus new alloys.

An integrated Blaupunkt radio/CD player plus four-speaker system is also standard with steering wheel mounted audio controls; a Bluetooth hands-free 'phone kit can be fitted to the system as an extra.

Air con is also standard and buyers have the option of 1.3 or 1.6 litre Lotus-engineered petrol engines, which have a six-year/100,000 mile powertrain warranty augmenting the overall three-year/60,000-mile vehicle warranty.

Suzuki cuts 4x4 dash for much less cash

by STEVE LOADER

NISSAN'S new Qashqai has won many plaudits for its 'crossover' off-roader styling injection to the Ford Focus sector.

But Suzuki was already there with the compact SX4 launched last year – the name/badge suggests otherwise, but most models are simply front-wheel drive though there is a 4x4 4Grip flagship.

While the wide stance and chunky styling might confuse onlookers, there is no argument about pricing though – a £9,999 entry price is great value for a car promising reliability as well as something different.

It epitomises the revolution in the Suzuki range; just a few years ago, Suzuki cars were known for value but zilch charisma – increasingly they have both.

Newcomers include the latest Suzuki Grand Vitara – a smart yet capable compact 4x4 – and the Swift supermini, which has shaken up its sector through Mini style appeal at a more affordable price.

The SX4 is the latest phase of the makeover and is a partnership with Fiat; Suzuki has supplied the platform and overall design while a rugged yet refined Fiat Multijet diesel is one of the engine options across both models.

However, the Italian brand has chosen to market its Sedici version as a budget 4x4 only model to complement its baby Panda 4x4, while Suzuki is majoring on two-wheel drive perhaps to augment sales of its conventional Focus challenger, the woeful Liana, until that is replaced.

Both sides appear to benefit from the arrangement and, as a rugged looking alternative to a mainstream hatchback, the SX4 is good value and well-equipped.

Based on my experience with the Sedici, I would expect the 4Grip model to do well off-road, but it is on-road where the overall design excels – the SX4 drives much better than most compact 4x4s.

The ride quality is firmish, but the payback is a genuinely taut and grippy drive with little of the rolling gait of the small 4x4 brigade.

I was not overly impressed with the refinement of the 105bhp 1.6-litre petrol engine, but it is willing and the gear shift slick enough for sportier drivers.

It is also a decent cruiser, though wind and road roar spoil the good impression a little.

If you were to be seduced by having a 4x4 wannabe rather than a family hatchback clone, you would not lose out on practicality either, with a decent boot and split folding rear seats.

Rear passenger space is also adequate, though the centre seat is cramped with poor legroom.

The driver gets a high perch with good visibility, apart from a slightly heavyweight front door pillar. The dashboard is also well-arranged though overall interior quality is average, yet perfectly acceptable at these sort of prices.

Unless you have to have four-wheel drive or diesel, our 1.6 petrol test car in flagship GLX trim is probably the best buy as this comes with alloys as standard to fill out those big arches.

Kia 'bus' passes the holiday road test

SEVEN-seaters have one big problem as I see it.

Cram them with kids and the "are we there yet chorus?" gets way too loud.

But practicality cannot be doubted and a holiday to the West Country gave me the chance to really put one to the test.

I chose a smaller or midi model rather than a full-size, barge-like people carrier so that I could better access tortuous nooks and crannies of Clotted Cream Country.

But I also needed real space for seven, although none in this class delivers that for adults using the rearmost pair of seats.

So I turned to Kia, the Korean brand that has transformed itself within four years from a maker whose cars were cheap, but hardly cheerful, into a real threat to European mainstream manufacturers.

Its Carens junior MPV (multi-purpose vehicle) impressed me at launch last year with the lengths gone to in delivering all-important space at the rear.

Its solution is a fuel tank intricately shaped to fit around the rear suspension in order to deliver a decent footwell for the third row of seats. Space and airiness inside is also surprising for a seven-seater within such compact directions.

I certainly had no complaints on that front from my party: three adults and four kids aged from four to 10.

We had arrived at our holiday destination in North Cornwall in two cars – the Carens was never going to cope with all of us plus baggage – but the Kia would be our single everyday car; a wise decision since Cornish resorts impose such draconian parking charges.

With all seven seats in use, the Carens proved to be as bad as its rivals in having little boot space left over for beach gear – and, sadly, rain wear – though there was plenty of stowage around the car for the kids' stuff.

And they loved 'the bus'.

There was the inevitable race for the back seats – usually won by the girls Rosie (9) and Tara (10) – who were then soon swapping ring tones, MP3 tracks and whispering quickly about nothing at all.

Meanwhile, Declan (6) and Sam (4) would console themselves with being closer to the action in row two and having things pointed out to them on our travels.

They were, to their glee, also able to beat the girls out of the bus whenever we arrived anywhere – an advantage that never seemed to lose its gloss.

The key question though was how many complaints from this tribe of fussy travellers and how many "are we there yets?" did we get during a week with the Carens?

Answers: none and one.

A great result for me, the main driver, considering the classic Cornish 'mizzle' kept us off the beach a lot and driving to find other amusements, including an especially long outing to the Eden Project – a near 100-mile round trip for us.

That has to be a tribute to the Carens' space, easy access and all-round comfort; the car rides well whether well or lightly laden, with little MPV roll or wallow, though it could never and would not ask to be described as sporty to drive.

All seven-seat Carens are fitted with an excellent 138bhp 2.0-litre turbodiesel.

It is smooth and worked well with the automatic 'box (£1,000 extra) on the test car – the Sports Mode manual selection proved useful for Cornish gradients and lanes.

Admittedly, the Carens is not the best-looking midi-MPV. Kia says it injected some 4x4 'outdoorsy' styling, but the slab sides and low rubbing strip simply make the car look baggy.

Nevertheless, it is keenly-priced and well-equipped with a good warranty. Unlike its forbears, it achieves this without being crudely executed or cheaply finished inside.

Companies urged to plan for Le Tour

By RICK SENLEY
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH little more than a month before the Tour de France descends on Kent, the county's business community is being urged to make sure they have their plans in place for the big day.

It is hoped the visit of the world's largest, annual spectator sporting event – and an estimated 1.5m spectators – will be a major boost for the county's tourism industry, as well as the hundreds of pubs, restaurants and towns lining the 126-mile route through Kent.

Roger Gough, Kent County Council cabinet member for regeneration, said: "The businesses that will gain the biggest benefit will be those who go the extra mile and enter into the spirit of Le Tour.

"We anticipate the Tour being the excuse for the biggest party in Kent for years. However, there will be businesses whose activities will unfortunately be hindered on the day."

Amanda Lumley, KCC's Tour de France project manager, said the county council was working closely with district councils and the emergency services to make sure the race passes safely and with as little disruption as possible.

Kent Highway Services will close the roads for six hours to allow the route to be prepared and the race to pass. Vehicles will not be allowed to drive on, park on, or cross the race route and pedestrians will only be allowed to cross at certain points.

With the exception of emergency services, there will be no vehicular access to buildings affected and there will be parking controls and other restrictions on and close to the race route.

MASSIVE: The Tour de France will attract 1.5m spectators when it runs through Kent

The Tour's Kent route passes through Dartford, into Gravesend then south west into Medway, before heading down to Maidstone.

From there the race enters Tonbridge, then into Tunbridge Wells before it heads off to Tenterden en route to Ashford.

The cavalcade then follows Kent's Roman heritage, travelling along Stone Street before finishing in Canterbury.

The Tour's Kent visit on Sunday, July 8, has been organised by KCC, in partnership with the Tour organisers, Amaury Sport Organisation, Transport for London, SEEDA, Medway Council, district councils and emergency services.

Biodiesel firm will transform oil into fuel

KENT businesses will be given a kick-start in turning green thanks to a new waste collection company branching out into the county.

Biodiesel manufacturer, Envirogroup, will collect waste vegetable oil from restaurants, schools and hotels and take it to a site in Faversham where scientists will process it in to energy-efficient biodiesel.

This process avoids using landfill and sewers and reduces greenhouse gas emissions. The biodiesel is then used by other businesses such as hauliers, couriers and taxi companies to power their fleets.

The scheme is being financially backed by investment promotion agency, Locate In Kent.

Kym Leatt, director of Envirogroup, said: "We investigated in the Medway area but felt Faversham had the combination of tremendous transport links – vital for our delivery fleet – plus the ideal sized site.

"This all comes at a time when more and more businesses are keen to recycle their used vegetable oil supplies, while other businesses appreciate the environmental benefit of using biodiesel over traditional diesel."

Two jobs will be created and Envirogroup vans will bring the used vegetable oil to the site for processing.

Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent, added: "Commitment to green issues is an increasing priority for businesses in Kent.

"Envirogroup is not just reducing the amount of waste vegetable oil that restaurants and hotels send to landfill, it is also providing transport companies in the area with an option of greener fuels, which are kinder to the environment."

Be inspired by true-life tales of success

YOUNG entrepreneurs from Kent will get to hear real-life tales of success as leading businessmen take to the stage for a two-day convention.

Experts will be on hand at the University of Kent in Canterbury to highlight the education and career opportunities available to ambitious young people in the county.

During the two days of seminars, workshops and lectures – including one set by Paul Carter, leader of Kent County Council – delegates will work with some of the county's leading businessmen and women.

Also lined up to speak, backed by the county's branch of the Institute of Directors (IOD), is inspirational Kent-based entrepreneur Graham Webb MBE.

Webb dropped out of school at 15 and overcame congenital spina bifida to forge a name in the world of business. He sold his haircare company to Wella in 2001 for millions.

Kent IOD Chairman Frazer Thompson said: "On show will be business leaders of the future and this is a great opportunity to network with some of the brightest talent available."

'Kent Tomorrow: Your Future is Here' takes place at the University of Kent at Canterbury on July 10 and 11.

Building futures

Exhibition will highlight the range of exciting opportunities at Europe's biggest development

By JAMIE McGINNES
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT'S position at the heart of the largest development plans in Europe will bring massive opportunities to the county.

The Government wants to build 160,000 houses and create 180,000 jobs by 2016 in the Thames Gateway "growth area", which takes in north Kent.

But in order to make sure the homes and supporting infrastructure are built on time, current forecasts indicate a need for an extra 45,000 trained and skilled workers in the South East's construction industry.

Biggest

A major gathering this month will provide companies from Kent and Medway with many of the answers they are looking for as they become involved in the massive building plans.

Construction Expo 07, which organisers say is the biggest event of its kind in the county this year, will give managers the chance to find out about training, cost-saving building design and issues such as preparing to contract for public sector and London 2012 work.

Organised by the North Kent Construction Skills Project (NoKCS) and Business Link, the exhibition on Wednesday, June 27 at The Historic Dockyard, Chatham, will bring together all types of businesses and organisations.

HOTSEAT: Glenys Gilbert-Collins of the North Kent Construction Skills Project will chair the Construction Expo 07

More than 80 exhibitors and 500 businesses are expected to attend the free event.

Glenys Gilbert-Collins of NoKCS will chair the event, which will start with the Building Futures Showcase, highlighting how employers and training providers can work together to combat the South East's construction skills shortages.

Visitors will be able to see the film Working Together – Building Futures, demonstrating the wide-ranging benefits of partnership working in the sector.

Construction Expo 07 will have three distinct zones.

Tomorrow's World and Opportunities will showcase the latest construction technologies, methods and materials, providing insights into saving money and resources, tendering and procurement and opportunities presented by the 2012 London Games.

The Training and Skills zone will look at job brokerage, recruitment, training providers, the Construction Skills Certificate Scheme and skills demonstrations.

The Fit for Business area will offer advice on important aspects of the sector like health and safety and legislation.

Construction Expo 07 takes place from 8am-4pm. It is supported by the South East Centre for the Built Environment, Medway Renaissance, Kent Thameside, Swale Forward, Medway Council, the South East England Development Agency, and Kent County Council.

Register to attend the event at www.eventskent.co.uk, email events@businesslinkkent.co.uk or telephone the events hotline on 01732 878555.

Talking about new technology

SMALL and medium-sized firms are invited to a briefing on the latest wireless and wired technologies.

The BT Talking Local Business Event takes place at the Ramada Hotel and Resort in Maidstone on Wednesday.

News of the event came after new research revealed that many small UK companies are failing to take full advantage of opportunities offered by communications technology.

Phil Hall, managing director of the BT Local Business which covers the Maidstone area, said: "Business success depends more than ever on making new and traditional communications technology work together to provide customers with a truly world-class service.

"Many small businesses are willing, but not always able to manage IT and communications effectively.

"This event will help small and medium firms operate more effectively by better understanding and harnessing the technology."

New deal for Fleet

FOOTBALL: Ebbsfleet United are set to unveil one of the biggest sponsorship deals in the club's history later this week.

The Conference club – formerly known as Gravesend & Northfleet – will also reveal a new club strip at the announcement due to take place at the club's ground on Friday.

Current sponsors Austrian Airlines have already confirmed they are not renewing their one-year agreement with the club.

Conway in a spin

MOTORSPORT: Sevenoaks racer Mike Conway's hopes of impressing on the streets of Monaco ground to a halt after he span off the track and out of contention following a pit stop.

The 23-year-old had been determined to get his GP2 Series season back on track on the winding street circuit, but once again finished with nothing but disappointment.

He span off shortly after returning to the track during the main race.

A fair few quid

Addicks' good behaviour to benefit fans

By TERRY CORDWELL

THEY may be looking at having to shave millions off their budget next season, but at least Charlton received some financial good cheer this week.

The Addicks failed to finish high enough up the table that matters the most, the Premiership, but they did top the Behaviour of the Public Fair Play League for the second successive season.

And with the accolade came a useful £20,000 cash prize – a sum reserved specifically for fans' initiatives next season.

Fantastic

It should hopefully put a smile on some of their fans' faces as they face up to life in the Championship after a seven-year stint in the top flight.

Ben Hayes, Charlton's elected supporters' director said: "It's great to have won the fans' Fair Play League again – not that the news should come as any surprise because we all know that Charlton fans are the best in the country.

"However, it's always nice to receive some recognition for that, and it's testament to how supporters have represented Charlton in the best possible fashion, both home and away, while also backing the club to the hilt."

THANKS: Alan Pardew says fans' support during a tough season was 'fantastic'

Club chiefs say they have not yet decided what to do with the prize cheque, but they will be under strict guidelines laid down by the league to ensure the money directly benefits the fans.

It is the third time in three years that Charlton have won a Fair Play award, with the Addicks also lifting the 2005/06 Fair Play League award.

Points are awarded for red and yellow cards, positive play, respect shown towards opponents and officials and the behaviour of club officials.

Boss Pardew, who quickly developed a good relationship with the Addicks' faithful despite the ultimately unsuccessful survival bid, said: "This is a nice award to win. It comes as no surprise to me as the support we received since Christmas was absolutely fantastic,

"It just shows you can provide great backing for the players and still represent the club brilliantly."

Pardew was also keen to show the fans he is committed to plotting a rapid path back to the Premiership, when he signed strikers Luke Varney and Chris Iwelumo just eight days after the season finished.

Few stories have eminated from The Valley since, with Pardew taking a break, but the former West Ham United and Reading boss is due back at Charlton's training ground next week, prompting speculation transfer news could be about to become public knowledge.

But only the most optimistic Addicks fans expect the likes of striker Darren Bent and skipper Luke Young to remain at The Valley.

Farrance on Reeves' side

WORLD Sidecar champion Tim Reeves has been forced to once again change his team-mate – just months after his brother announced he was quitting.

Tim and Tristan Reeves from Tenterden, near Ashford, made a name for themselves as they revved up to win both the 2005 and 2006 World Sidecar championships.

But Tristan stepped down at the end of last season. His wife had just given birth to their first child and a new job meant his priorities had to shift off the track.

Tim, 33, determined to carry on, recruited Irishman Stuart Graham, 27, to help him push for a third straight title.

But, no sooner had the 2007 season started last month, Graham came a cropper during a practice lap ahead of the opening round at Schleiz in Germany.

He picked up an injury which forced him to miss the main race, with Cumbria's Patrick Farrance flown in at short notice to replace him.

And the 22-year-old clearly impressed Reeves.

The driver gushed: "Patrick really is the mustard.

"We only had time for 10 laps in the wet in Germany but we gelled instantly. We went on to win the first race and broke the lap record in the process.

"We would have won the second race as well, if the fuel pump hadn't packed up six laps before the end. Luckily we managed to coast home in seventh."

Farrance will now replace Graham for the rest of the season.

He will be in action this weekend at the Isle of Man TT races, before returning in time for the next round of the Superside FIM World Sidecar Championship as it drives into Brands Hatch – Reeves' local circuit.

The racer added: "To be honest, I can't wait for Brands. I'm confident we can secure another win."

Round two of the series forms part of the undercard of the DTM Championship – the German touring car event.

After Brands, the series moves on to Assen in Holland where it forms part of the MotoGP race meeting over the weekend of June 28-30.

Windies too relaxed compared to greats

As England prepare to take on West Indies at Old Trafford in the third and final Test on Thursday, former Kent and England fast bowler Dean Headley exclusively reveals to Kent on Sunday his views on the England set-up under new coach Peter Moores, and Kent's resurgent one-day form.

WHEN England demolished the West Indies at Headingley last week, the whoops of joy from supporters can only have been drowned out by the sighs of relief from within the England camp itself.

It was so important for England to lay down exactly who was the better team in this series and what better way to do it by inflicting the heaviest defeat – a thumping innings and 283-runs – on the tourists in their 79-year Test history.

Everyone is aware just how under-prepared this West Indies team were coming into this series. To go into that first Test with under 50-overs of cricket reminds me of that old saying; 'failing to prepare is preparing for failure'. It's not the West Indies' fault – more that of the ICC who schedule these games.

But having got a draw at Lord's they went to Headingley as a more dangerous prospect in terms of sneaking a draw or even a win in this short series. They had some cricket under their belt. Fortunately for England, they wiped the floor with them – despite the rain interruptions.

Although the West Indies team have been in a huge decline for a while, they do have the talent. But the great West Indies sides of the past not only had fantastic talent, they also had incredible work ethic too.

I can't say how hard they work now, but I saw them train two or three years ago and their training was ill-disciplined, too relaxed and showed none of the hard work of West Indies teams from the past.

To be honest, England didn't play too well in that second Test. Ryan Sidebottom bowled quite well, but the rest were disappointing.

Steve Harmison bowled erratically, as did Liam Plunkett. The question now is whether Sidebottom stays in the side. I think he probably should.

But it is a decision for new England coach Peter Moores – and I have no doubt he'll make the right one.

I knew him when he was 18 and a keeper for the second team at Worcester. I bumped into him again last month at the Lord's Test.

He's a good lad; a normal bloke. He's worked hard at his own cricket career and done really well. Now he's moved into coaching and management and he's enjoyed success with Chris Adams down at Sussex.

He's got a 'can-do' attitude and always believes he can turn things around.

He's a tough competitor too and obviously has fantastic man-management skills – which is just what this England set-up needs. Duncan Fletcher was good at it, and Moores will be too.

The media are likely to warm to him too as he'll be more approachable than Fletcher and a lot more open. He doesn't make excuses and he'll not hide from the problems. From the players' point of view, though, he'll be a hard taskmaster to impress.

One player who has certainly earned a tick next to his name is Sussex wicketkeeper Matt Prior. He's had a great baptism in Test cricket and done a fantastic job; his century was well deserved and great to watch.

'Great West Indies sides of the past not only had fantastic talent, they had incredible work ethic too'

But this looks like bad news for Kent's Geraint Jones, who still harbours hopes of winning back his place in the Test team.

Unfortunately, Geraint's not scoring runs in the county game, while Matt Prior has grabbed the opportunity he's been given. What's more, Prior knows he can do it now – he knows how to score a Test match hundred.

As for Geraint, I think he'll have to wait a long time before breaking back into the England set-up; if he gets a chance at all.

One decision which did pay off for Moores was bringing Michael Vaughan back into the Test arena after 18 months out.

It was a big decision. Personally, I believe if you are out for that amount of time you should play yourself back into the team by scoring well for your county. But you can hardly argue with his century. It was a gamble that paid off.

The problem, I think, is what message does it send out to other players out for such a prolonged period? After all, he didn't miss just three or four Tests, but more than 20. It didn't work out for Ashley Giles did it?

Back at county level, it's been great to see Kent finally start enjoying some success in the one-day game. The county has always played limited-overs cricket well in the past, so it has remained something of an enigma as to why they haven't performed in recent years.

But in the one-day game it is so easy to get on a roll – whether that is winning or losing. I've always said you can't create team spirit – you can only do that by playing and getting results.

You can have as many group bonding sessions as you like, but if you keep going out and losing, it means nothing.

You need to go out there, play for each other and enjoy your cricket and what's encouraging right now is that they're scoring for fun, while the bowling attack is looking impressive too.

Yasir Arafat is a quality bowler and Andrew Hall is performing well too. You need your strike bowlers and bits-and-pieces bowlers to be working together.

I just hope that apart from the overseas stars we have more homegrown talent such as Rob Joseph coming up through the ranks.

If they can keep the run going now, then a Lord's final could be more than just a dream this season.

EXCLUSIVE

By CHRIS BRITCHER

GILLINGHAM fans have been told to brace themselves for up to 15 new faces in time for next season.

And the first of the many could have already put pen to paper.

Chairman Paul Scally spent Friday afternoon meeting with players and hinted if the right man agreed the right deal he would sign them there and then, with a public announcement either this weekend or within the coming days.

Among those definitely on the shopping list is 27-year-old Rotherham United striker Delroy Facey.

The former Bolton player, who made a number of Premiership appearances under Sam Allardyce, is believed to have held talks with Scally and manager Ronnie Jepson.

He is midway through a two-year deal at Milmoor but could put a get-out clause into action because the Millers were relegated into League Two at the end of the season.

Offer

Scally confirmed: "We're seeing players most days to be honest. We have a long list and Delroy Facey is on it. But we want to be sure we get the right players so we're not just going to snap up the first ones we see."

Cheltenham Town's Craig Armstrong is also close to agreeing a deal although the out-of-contract defender this week was offered a new and improved offer by Town boss John Ward to stay with the club.

Scally added: "We're being cautious because we want to build a team capable of taking us up and out of League One and back into the Championship. It's different from just bringing players in to fill a role.

"By the start of the season I'd imagine fans can expect to see around 10 to 15 new faces.

"I think the fans will be pretty pleased when they see the signings we're going to make and that we're in for a exciting season."

It also fuels the widely held belief Matt Jarvis, Danny Spiller and Michael Flynn will all be leaving the club this season, freeing up the wage budget, despite efforts to tie them to the club. Spiller was linked with relegated Charlton this week. Millwall have already admitted they are interested too.

One player not returning will be former skipper Paul Smith, 35. Rumours have suggested he could be looking for another spell at Priestfield. Scally "categorically" denied the claims, adding "if he was five years younger it would be a different story".

Meanwhile, he congratulated Ryman League Dover Athletic on the appointment this week of former Gills player-manager Andy Hessenthaler as their new boss. He now hopes for mutually beneficial links to be established between the two Kent sides.

Scally said: "We've got players who can help Hessy and hopefully he'll have players who can help us, so I'd hope to see a strong relationship develop between the two clubs.

"Dover have made a wise choice and I'm sure he'll do a great job."

Scally admitted he had spoken to the veteran 41-year-old midfielder several times since he was released from League Two side Barnet and was aware of his talks with Dover.

He added: "It's a good move. He needs to keep his hand in no matter what level. I'm sure he'll take them up to the Conference at the very least. We'd like to see Dover do well and obviously we'd like to see Hessy do well."

Scally also confirmed talks were taking place to send a full-strength Gillingham side down to Crabble to face Hessenthaler's new-look Dover in a pre-season friendly.

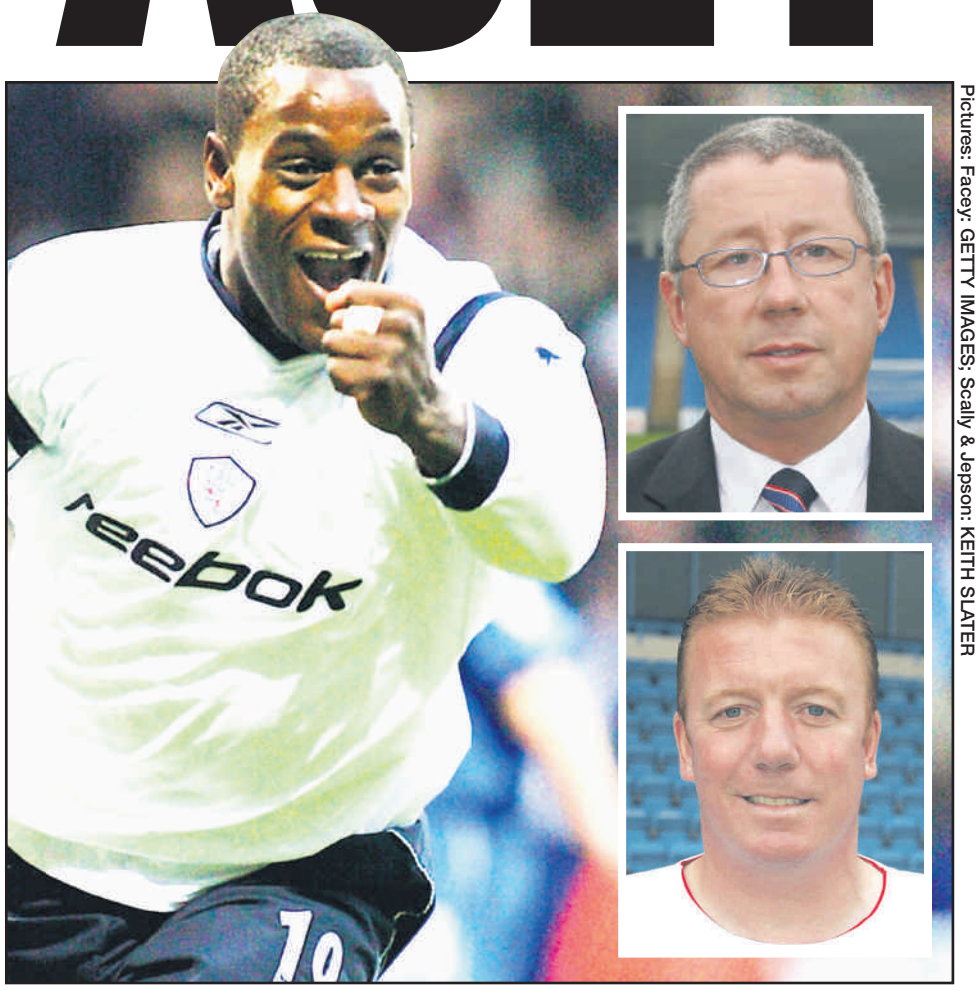

Hess has been given the task of taking the former Conference club back up the non-league pyramid.

Among those players the Gills legend is looking to secure for next season is Jon Wallis – the former Gills youth star who has spent spells on loan at Crabble.

Wallis had been looking to secure a new deal with a Football League club since his contract with Hereford United expired, but has now said the appointment of Hess could tempt him to move to Dover.

DANNY Jackman this week denied he had verbally agreed a new deal at Priestfield before signing a two-year contract with League One rivals Northampton Town.

So far, the only player to have agreed a new deal with the Gills is veteran defender Ian Cox.
